ROSETTA O'LEARY VINNING'S

NEW CONTRALTO SONG,

"THY SPIRIT'S LOW REPLIES." 3s.

"We are glad to find that the accomplished composer of this song has at length resolved to publish under her own name, for the real musical eloquence which distinguishes the composition before us—as well as some others which we have noticed by the same writer—must eventually receive due appreciation, and we are always sorry when a true artist seeks to veil his or her personality from the public. Those who follow our reviews must remember that a short time ago we spoke in the highest terms of two of Mrs. O'Leary's songs—'In the Pyramid's Shadow,' and 'That dear song I loved the best'—which were published under the assumed name of 'Allan Hyde;' and all the praise we bestowed upon these is fully merited by this later one; indeed we think it the best she has yet composed."—Musical Times.

ARTHUR O'LEARY'S

VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL COMPOSITIONS.

(Sung by Miss ANTOINETTE STERLING.) Price 3s.

"The composer of this eminently thoughtful and very beautiful song—whose rare talent should be better known—is essentially a man for an enterprising publisher to take up and to encourage; for though his productions are not, so far as we know, numerous, they all manifest a high order of capability, and we feel sure that one who succeeds so well in small things could not be far short of the mark in larger ones. The song in question is for a contralto voice. Its theme is full of charm, and there is a strong dramatic element throughout, highly characteristic of the words. The interest, which never for a moment flags, culminates in the coda, which is broadly conceived and exciting in its effects."—Queen.

"LISTENING."

(Mezzo Soprano.) Price 4s.

"One of the most refined and intellectual songs we have met with for some time."—Musical Times.

"THE SHADOW ON MY HEART."

(Mezzo Soprano.) Price 4s.

"If the musical world but knew what it was about, it would simply go mad over this beautiful little song."—Queen.

"Full of beauty and singularly effective to sing."—Torquay Directory.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

"Extremely elegant. Such artistic music is well calculated to engender and foster the best taste."—Queen.

"Mr. O'Leary is a refined and thoughtful musician who is gradually working his way to a position of importance."—Musical Times.

"As a composer Mr. Arthur O'Leary has already distinguished himself. His compositions denote considerable powers of invention, as well as constructive knowledge."—Observer.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depôt for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. Flavell's, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer—Charles Russell.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
MARCH 1, 1875.

WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT.

The death of an artist so gifted and a man so beloved as he whose simple name—divested of the world's titles—stands at the head of these remarks, is an event which cannot be estimated at its true importance whilst the shock of his loss, both to music and musicians, is felt with that poignant sorrow the evidence of which, to the honour of those who represent musical journalism in this country, has been so universally demonstrated. As time rolls on, the influence he exercised over the progress of real art will be more evident, even to those who are prone to speak of his want of productiveness in later years; for not only have we to thank him for what he has done, but for what he has not done. Sterndale Bennett was indeed no mercantile musician; for, surrounded by temptations to write for a market always ready to receive his contributions, he steadily kept his true mission in view, content rather with the fame which accumulated with the gradual appreciation of his matured works, than desirous of courting that notoriety which is too often brief and uncertain as life itself. But apart from those tangible proofs of his genius which earned for him a public reputation, he was ever a silent worker in the good cause of musical education. As Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, I, in common with many of his early friends and fellow-students, have had so many opportunities of witnessing his unceasing devotion to the business of the Institution, his desire to uphold the highest interests of art, his untiring efforts to inculcate in the minds of young pupils that love for the great and glorious works which were his own study through life, and his firm resolution to maintain a School of Music in every respect worthy of the nation, that I have often marvelled how time could have been snatched for the compositions which he recently produced, replete as they are with that beauty of form and finish of detail which characterise the works of his youth.

Born at Sheffield in 1816, of a musical family, his father being an organist in that town, the future master had to deplore the loss of both parents in early life; and at eight years of age he was entered as a chorister at King's College, Cambridge University. Here his exceptional talent soon attracted attention, and he was sent to the Royal Academy of Music, where he studied under Dr. Crotch, Mr. W. H. Holmes, and Mr. Cipriani Potter. In this Institution I first met him. He was seated at a table in the Professors' room when I entered, and with that irresistible manner which attracted all towards him, made me in five minutes as much at my ease as if we had known each other for years. Then he began to speak to me about music, for I was to be his pupil (he being a Master in the Institution, although still a student), and the exercise he then set me is now in my possession. But I was too much absorbed in what he was doing when I came in to think intently upon what I was doing myself. Music-paper was before him, and he was writing a Pianoforte Concerto, the whole of which he played to us when the hour of instruction was over. Never shall I forget it; delicacy, beauty of tone, eloquence of phrasing, an indescribable charm in his mere touch, so fascinated his listeners that it was with difficulty he managed to escape from the room. On me, having just entered the Institution, the effect was of course greater than upon those of his fellow-students who were acquainted with his wonderful gifts; and as he had not then made a name outside the walls of the Academy, I was naturally astounded at the exhibition of such mature talent amongst the pupils of a music-school. At this time there were evening orchestral rehearsals at the Academy, which were directed by Sterndale Bennett. Here the students were trained to the contemplation of good music; and never would the young conductor, I well recollect, allow any pupil to remain in ignorance of the composition being performed. "Listen," he said to me, on the first evening of my entrance; "this is a Symphony by Beethoven; try to comprehend the symmetrical construction of the work, and carry away as much as you can with you to think upon afterwards." If such solicitude for the artistic welfare of those around him existed in the boy, it may readily be believed how it ripened and expanded in the man. During these sunny days music flowed from his pen as freely as from his fingers. A Symphony in E flat, three Pianoforte Concertos—in D minor, E flat, and C minor, respectively—and two Overtures, "Parasina" and "The Naiades," fully confirmed the truth of the predictions as to his place in the world of art which years ago had been foreseen by those most competent to judge. These compositions—instinct with a poetic grace which charmed alike musical and unmusical listeners; remarkable for that symmetry of construction which seemed to spring rather from a spontaneous appreciation of form, than from a diligent study of models, and evidencing in the instrumentation a delicate perception of orchestral colouring which stamped them with a distinct individuality—were not slow in establishing the fame of one who, however destined to the highest position in English musical art, worked but for the love of his work, and alone seemed unconscious of his power. When invited to play his Concerto in E flat at the Philharmonic Concerts, his fellow-students seemed to glory in the honour thus accorded to one of themselves: not a jealous word was either uttered or thought; and the applause with which he was greeted at the concert was echoed again and again in the Academy on his return. Had he won the hearts of his companions solely by his talents, some there might have been who could have wished him occasionally to descend from his pedestal and walk on a level with themselves; but he was the idol of all, because his genial nature made him the same with all: in recreation, as in study, he was sincere and truthful—though a trained artist in the concert-room, he was a merry-hearted boy in the playground.

But Germany, then ringing with the fame of Mendelssohn, had attractions for the young composer which could not be resisted; and for a time he left England to win new honours at the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipsic, where he formed a close intimacy, not only with Mendelssohn but with Schumann. Here he wrote his fine Overture, "The Wood Nymphs," which was played at the above-named concerts, then under Mendelssohn's direction, with unqualified success; and, both as a pianist and composer, the name of Sterndale Bennett became as famous in Germany as it had already become in England; Schumann, who at that time edited the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, writing in the most rapturous terms, and with a felicity of expression peculiarly his own, upon the genius of an artist who in his own person had incontestibly proved that England was not the "unmusical country" it had been too long represented.

On his return he performed in public, and laid the foundation of a love for classical chamber-music in this country, the effect of which can scarcely be over estimated. He also composed his Pianoforte Concerto in F minor, a Caprice in E major, with orchestral accompaniments, and a Sonata and Fantasia for pianoforte—the first dedicated to Mendelssohn, and the second to Schumann. For the Leeds Festival in 1858, which he conducted, he wrote his Cantata "The May Queen," and for the Birmingham Festival of 1867 his Oratorio "The Woman of Samaria," thus amply asserting his mastery over two distinct schools of composition, which, with that conscientiousness which ruled every action of his life, he had wisely reserved for a period when he believed that experience had sufficiently tempered his natural powers for the due performance of such a task: indeed, with respect to the latter work, I may here assert, from my own knowledge, that for years he had pondered on that episode in the sacred writings which he afterwards composed, feeling how its effect could be deepened by a sympathetic musical illustration, and patiently waiting for the time when he thought himself capable of doing justice to the subject.

The only appointment that he ever sought was one which he did not succeed in procuring—that of the Musical Professorship at Edinburgh University; but the wisdom of declining the services of a man who really honoured the city by becoming a candidate for such an office was fortunately confined to the Scottish capital, for from every part of England where genius is recognised came marks of distinction which were unasked for. At the decease of Dr. Walmisley, the Music Chair at Cambridge was offered to him and accepted; and here he took his degree of Doctor of Music, and also became a Master of Arts. At Oxford he was made a D.C.L.; and in 1871 Her Majesty conferred upon him the honour of Knighthood. He also became conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts, resigning, after eleven years' service, in favour of Mr. W. G. Cusins; and in 1868 was appointed Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, an office which he held until the day of his death.

When I name his poetical Overture, "Paradise and the Peri," the Ode to Tennyson's words, which he was engaged to compose as the representative of English music at the opening of the International Exhibition in 1862, a second Ode, to verses by the late Canon Kingsley, performed at the Installation of the Duke of Devonshire as Chancellor of Cambridge University, his beautiful Sonata, "The Maid of Orleans," and his Symphony in G minor, lately given at the Crystal Palace, all his compositions of more recent times are included to which public attention has been particularly directed; but the number of smaller works known and cherished by professors and the highest class of amateurs it would be impossible here to chronicle. As a testimonial from his brother artists on his Knighthood, a biennial scholarship was founded in his name at the Royal Academy of Music; and on the 7th of April 1872 this was announced to him by the Attorney General (now Lord Coleridge) at a large meeting at St. James's Hall, when some of his compositions were performed; and, overwhelmed with the kindly feeling expressed by those around him, Sterndale Bennett—unchanged by the courtly prefix henceforth inseparably united with his name—bowed his last to that public which he had done so much to educate.

Devoting himself now, with an energy even beyond his physical powers of endurance, to his duties as Principal of that Institution in which he had received his education, and to the memory of which he clung with the sincerest affection, he cherished but the one thought of directing the musical education of the country into the healthiest channel; and, in accordance with this resolve, the programmes of all the concerts at which the students exclusively performed became models which will doubtless serve as guides to those who have the future conduct of the Academy. But his health had been gradually failing; and those most intimate with him became aware of that which they feared perhaps to breathe even to each other. On the 16th of January he presided at a meeting of the Committee of Management, and was also at the Academy on the following Thursday; on Monday news was received at the Institution that he was seriously ill, and on that day week (in his 59th year), he breathed his last at his residence in St. John's Wood, surrounded by every member of his family. The news of his death paralysed for a moment those who so short a time before had sat with him in deliberation at the Committee whose duty it was now to assemble for the purpose of doing honour to his memory. A Requisition, signed, not only by the leading members of the musical profession, but by many of those most eminent in other departments of art, was presented to Dean Stanley, praying that the remains of the deceased composer should be interred in Westminster Abbey. It is almost needless to say that this request was complied with, and no sooner was the day of the funeral made known than evidences of the universal esteem in which he was held, both artistically and personally, became apparent by the repeated expressions of desire to take part in the mournful ceremony. On Saturday the 6th ult., the procession started from St. John's Wood, passed the door of the Royal Academy of Music, and in Hanover Square was joined by carriages containing a deputation from the University of Cambridge, the Earl of Dudley (President of the Royal Academy of Music), the Directors and Committee of Management of the Academy, deputations from the Philharmonic Society and Royal Society of Musicians, the pall-bearers (consisting exclusively of fellow-students of the deceased), a deputation from the Verein für Kunst und Wissenschaft (German Athenæum), the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music, and the private carriages of Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Right Rev. the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and several others. Inside the Abbey the stillness was at first appalling; but as the coffin, covered with flowers, moved along the dark path, preceded by the surpliced choir, singing the introductory sentences of the burial service to Croft's impressive music, and the stifled sobs from sincere and loving friends drew attention to the faces of the bystanders, the solemn silence of so vast a multitude was felt by the mourners as the most fitting tribute to the memory of one who had so legitimately earned a right to a final resting-place amongst those who, like himself, had adorned and enriched the art to which they had devoted their lives. Purcell's Burial Chant to the 90th Psalm was chosen for the occasion; and after the lesson the beautiful quartett, "God is a Spirit," from the deceased musician's "Woman of Samaria," was given, first by solo voices and afterwards in chorus. Then the body was borne to the grave, near that of his brothers in art, Purcell, Croft, Blow, and Arnold; and as the coffin was lowered, Croft's music was resumed. After this Dean Stanley continued the service, and a portion of Handel's Funeral Anthem, "His body is buried in peace," was impressively sung, Mr. Turle, who presided at the organ, playing the Dead March, from "Saul," as the mourners pressed forward to take a last look at the grave where, under a bed of flowers, reposed the mortal remains of a dear and honoured brother. To say that, apart from those who composed the funeral procession, almost every member of the musical profession in England was present; that a wreath of the choicest flowers, sent by the ladies of the Royal Academy of Music, was laid, by a sympathetic hand, upon the coffin; and that pupils of the deceased, with floral offerings (many of which as they fell into the grave were moistened with the tears of the donors) stood for some minutes rooted to the spot, as if scarcely realizing the possibility of a final separation with one whom to know as a master was to regard as a friend, is only to mention a few of the proofs how widely spread was the sympathy for his loss, and how earnest was the wish to pay the last tribute to his memory.

Sterndale Bennett is no more; but the world of art moves on, and carries with it, in the treasures he bequeathed, the pure and loving mind of the man. It will be long—very long—before that mourning for his loss, which is too deep for words, can be even lessened; yet to those who knew him, and sympathised with his gentle and sensitive nature, it may at least be some consolation to feel assured that his death was calm and peaceful as his life. Henry C. Lunn.

A SCHUBERT CATALOGUE.*

"Not unfrequently," says Carlyle in the "Preliminary" of his Sartor Resartus, "the Germans have been blamed for an unprofitable diligence; as if they struck into devious courses where nothing was to be had but the toil of a rough journey: as if, forsaking the gold-mines of finance, and that political slaughter of fat oxen whereby a man himself grows fat, they were apt to run goose-hunting into regions of bilberries and crowberries, and be swallowed up at last into remote peat bogs. . . . Surely the plain rule is, let each considerate person have his way and see what it will lead to. For not this man and that man, but all men make up mankind, and their united tasks the task of mankind. How often have we seen some such adventurous, and perhaps much censured wanderer light on some outlying, neglected, yet vitally momentous province, the hidden treasures of which he first discovered, and kept proclaiming till the general eye and effort were directed thither, and the conquest was completed; thereby, in these his seemingly so aimless rambles, planting new standards, founding new habitable colonies, in the immeasurable circumambient realms of Nothingness and Night." Thus (with a very moderate expenditure of capital letters) does the Sage of Chelsea vindicate Diogenes Teufelsdröck, J.U.D., &c., his researches into the philosophy of clothes, and his six bags of "miscellaneous paper-masses." Some such championship might have appeared necessary when another German began to burrow for the details required to make up the first Thematic Catalogue of a great composer's works, and patiently to hunt down all the Protean forms which the ingenuity of arrangers and transcribers had caused those works to assume. Was the game worth the candle? Who would buy the book? To what use could it be put commensurable with the trouble involved? So might lookers-on have queried, not without a touch of scorn, but the patient German worked on, and the result was that he founded a distinct and increasing class of musical literature, the value of which nobody questions. Every composer of eminence will soon have his Thematic Catalogue. Dr. Ludwig von Köchel has achieved the good work for Mozart—how completely some of us are thankful to know; an anonymous writer has attended to Schumann; Weber has been thoroughly "done" by F. W. Jahns, and painstaking Herr Nottebohm has looked after Beethoven. Nor is this all that Herr Nottebohm has acccomplished in the same line, the firm of Friedrich Schreiber, in Vienna, now offering as the latest result of his patience, a thoroughly good catalogue of Schubert. Together with every amateur who is interested in that unfortunate genius, we hail the new work with pleasure, and congratulate Herr Nottebohm upon the manner in which he has discharged a very difficult task. The great essentials of such a book are, accuracy and completeness; and when it is remembered that these qualities have to appear in connection with hundreds of compositions (many scattered about in MS.), and thousands of editions, the high merit of success need not be demonstrated. With regard to the accuracy of the Catalogue, it is, of course, impossible to judge confidently as respects every detail, but we have tested the book in many ways, and it has passed the ordeal triumphantly. That there are no flaws in its completeness would be too much to assert. Herr Nottebohm, for example, leaves unnoticed the few bars of melody which are all that Schubert wrote of the Scherzo in the eighth (B minor) symphony. But, generally speaking, the book may be styled an exhaustive one; in proof whereof take the particulars furnished about "Die Schöne Müllerin." Besides the details usual to thematic catalogues, Herr Nottebohm gives us the result of his labours in tracing those famous songs through all their (German) editions and forms, nearly three closely-printed pages being devoted to the editions alone. The arrangements fill five and a-half pages more, the character of the transcription being specified, and also the author, publisher, place of publication, and price. When a compiler shows industry such as this, we are disposed to trust him, and accept his work.

In arranging his materials, Herr Nottebohm did not attempt the impossible task of settling the order in which Schubert's works were written. Wherever the date of composition can be ascertained it is given, but the Opus number guides in making up the first section of the book. The compositions included in this section, which is devoted to those with an Opus number only, are 173, beginning with the "Erl-King," and ending with six songs for voice and pianoforte. This opening and closing must strike everybody who examines the list as significant. Turning over page after page, we find little save song after song; and even when a break first occurs, it is made by a set of waltzes (Op. 9). At Op. 15 we come upon the fantasia for pianoforte in C major, after which songs and waltzes begin again, till Op. 26 introduces the music to Rosamunde. Presently chamber music makes its appearance, but the ratio of important works to comparative trifles is not greatly increased. How eloquent is this fact, especially when looked at in connection with Herr Nottebohm's third section, which catalogues the compositions without Opus number, published after the composer's death. Here we start with the ninth and eighth symphonies, going on with the quartetts in D minor and major, the pianoforte sonata in A minor, and those in C minor, A and B flat. After these come four Masses, the Cantata, Lazarus, and a host of works nearly equal in importance. Truly, Schubert's is a posthumous fame. A writer of songs and waltzes in life: in death he appears among the grandest of tone-poets. Pity him we must, for such a spirit as his, though he laboured on regardless of present renown, could have done no other than long after that recognition which is, next to its own self-consciousness, the sweetest reward of genius. But the moral to be drawn from Herr Nottebohm's Catalogue brings comfort after all. The good cannot be repressed. That which has in it a spark of the divine fire will some day kindle the admiration of the world.

The second section embraces the multitude of Lieder published by Diabelli under the title: Franz Schubert's nachgelassene musikaliche Dichtungen für Gesang und Pianaforte,—in all fifty sets. But to many who avail themselves of this welcome volume, one of its most interesting divisions will be that which brings the whole of the master's compositions under the eye in orderly battalions. After reviewing page after page of orchestral, chamber, and concerted music of various kinds, we come finally upon the army of songs and vocal pieces, only to look down their ranks with a sense of utter bewilderment as we remember that the author of all these things died at thirty-one. The fecundity of Schubert was monstrous, and in view of it, his early death seems the most natural of events. He, if ever man did, accomplished the work that was appointed him. For this let us be thankful, and not for this alone. The gratitude of amateurs who love Schubert is due to the plodding, unwearied industry of the German savant from whom the book before us has come. Herr Nottebohm could never be charged with "goose hunting" or with exploring "regions of bilberries and crowberries," but, to continue the words of Carlyle, he has lighted on an outlying and neglected province, the treasures of which are now common property. Schubert owes him much on that account. We owe him more.

J. B.

We have received a letter from Dr. Lloyd Fowle, with reference to the remarks in our last number upon his claim to be put forward as the "People's Musician." We quite agree with the writer that if any artist can collect two thousand opinions upon himself, he has a perfect right—however fulsome they may be—to believe them; and that those who write them have an equal right to be credited with sincerity. But when these testimonials, instead of being preserved for the inspection of those who may require such guarantee of artistic qualifications, are forced before the public, it is not to be wondered at that they should be publicly commented upon. We much regret that a composer whose talents are so extensively vouched for should have thought it necessary, or even politic, to exalt himself by endeavouring to depreciate the genius of one whose fame is sufficiently solid to be proof against such attacks. Dr. Fowle evidently believes that his friends are those who praise him, and his enemies those who do not; but, though he may place us in the latter category, he will see that our enmity is not so deadly as to induce us to print his letter. A communication from Dr. Stainer in our present number contains a series of questions which we should like to see publicly propounded to all those members of the musical profession who place Mus. Doc., or indeed any other title after their name, without mentioning the University from which they obtained them. The "moral support" of all graduates in music—which Dr. Stainer relies upon in bringing the subject forward—will most certainly be freely accorded; and Dr. Fowle should thank us for affording him an opportunity of strengthening his claim to a Civil Service pension by stating where the two degrees which he uses were conferred upon him.

The feeling of regret at the loss of so distinguished an artist as the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, has been so generally evinced, not only by the presence of most of the principal members of the musical profession at his funeral, but by a graceful tribute to his memory, both in sacred and secular buildings, that the solitary instance of unexplained silence on such an occasion becomes painfully prominent. We will not now dwell upon the absence of the name of the conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society from the numerously-signed Requisition to Dean Stanley, requesting that the remains of the deceased composer should be interred in Westminster Abbey, nor upon the fact of so eminent a musician not being present at the funeral—because these are purely personal matters upon which the less that is said the better—but that the Sacred Harmonic Society should be completely unrepresented at what might be considered a national demonstration, and that at the concert given on the evening before the funeral, not the slightest token of sympathy with the melancholy event should have been manifested (although a tardy recognition of it was given at the concert three weeks afterwards), are marks of disrespect which, whether of omission or commission, can scarcely be passed over without a protest.

We should have more pleasure in chronicling the fact of the title Mus. Doc. having been bestowed upon Mr. W. H. Longhurst, organist of Canterbury Cathedral, were we not constrained to add that it has been through the patronage (if we may so term it) of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who has the power, as our readers are probably aware, of granting this degree to any person who sufficiently earns his good opinion. That such an absurd privilege should exist in the present day is scarcely perhaps so extraordinary as that an Archbishop should be found to exercise it, and a musician to avail himself of it. Surely an artist of proved ability like the organist of Canterbury Cathedral would gain more real honour by refusing than accepting a title at the hands of an individual which he knows can only be legitimately granted by one of the Universities.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The announcement of Herr Joachim's name in the programme of the concert on the 6th ult., for the first time this season, drew a large audience, and his performance of Spohr's 6th Concerto proved that, if possible, he has gained since we last heard him, in all those qualities which have secured for him so high a position in the world of art. Dr. Hans von Bülow has also played with his accustomed success, selecting Moscheles's Concerto in G minor, a work too rarely heard in a concert-room. Lachner's Suite in C, for orchestra, must be again heard before it can be noticed according to its merits. Of the four movements, the Gavotte commanded the greatest success; but the writing throughout the work is masterly, the Finale, especially, showing real power in the treatment of the subjects and thorough knowledge of the resources of the orchestra. Amongst the vocalists Mdlle. Levier has achieved a decided success, but we must also mention that the artistic singing of such long established favourites as Madame Patey and Mr. E. Lloyd has materially strengthened the programmes during the month.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CONCERTS.

Amongst the interesting compositions given during the past month, Herr Hégar's Violin Concerto, performed by Herr Wilhelmj, claims the first notice. It is a work well worthy of a master, although its composer is, we believe, still a pupil at the Leipsic Conservatoire. Apart from its merit in an artistic point of view, it is an excellent vehicle for the display of the legitimate powers of the instrument; and rendered as it was throughout by Herr Wilhelmj, its success with the audience (even with the most critical portion of it) was most decisive. Paganini's Concerto in D has also been played by the same artist, its enormous difficulties being vanquished with the utmost ease. The orchestral concerts have displayed the powers of the band to the best advantage, Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony," Auber's "Exhibition Overture," the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "Paradise and the Peri," and many other works of acknowledged excellence having been given with much effect, under the able direction of Mr. Barnby, who has conducted all the concerts. Mdlle. Levier, Madame Patey, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Miss Annie Sinclair, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Whitney, Herr Werrenrath, &c., have attracted large audiences at the ballad concerts, which appear to be now firmly established in public favour. The Ash Wednesday performance of the "Messiah" was numerously attended and thoroughly successful, the choruses being given with even more than the usual precision and effect. On the 23rd ult. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, the principal vocalists being Madame Marie Roze, Miss Anna Williams, Miss Dones, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Messrs. Bentham, Montem Smith, Kenningham, Horscroft, Stanley Smith, and Whitney. The choruses were most effectively rendered by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ, and the performance was, as usual, conducted by Mr. Barnby.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CONCERTS.

The twentieth season of these excellent concerts commenced on the 18th ult., with a highly interesting programme. With the exception of "God save the Queen" (arranged for a choir by Henry Leslie), and the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's Quartett, "God is a Spirit" (sung in chorus, as a tribute to the memory of the deceased composer), the selection was exclusively confined to German music. Brahms's Waltzes for voices, with an accompaniment for four hands on the pianoforte, seemed scarcely to produce the impression which might have been anticipated from their purely musical merits. They are graceful and tuneful; but the choir and pianoforte did not appear to amalgamate; and to us it seemed either that, with such an accompaniment, they should be sung by four solo voices, or that, being given to the whole choir, a full orchestra was necessary as a support. The compositions were somewhat coldly received; but this ought not to be accepted as a reason why they should not be heard again at some future time in another form. Blumenthal's two new part-songs, "Night" and "Laughing Song," produced a marked impression. The first of these is by far the better of the two—a novel effect being gained by the tenors sustaining the theme, whilst the other voices accompany—but the second song elicited the encore, partly because the laugh was too infectious to be resisted. Both compositions are, however, well worthy of the fame of a writer whose works always evidence that care and finish which cannot fail to command attention. The apology made by Mr. Henry Leslie for the debutante, Miss Eva Leslie, on the score of indisposition, was kindly meant, but not needed, for her charming voice and style enlisted the sympathies of her hearers from the first; and the applause with which she was greeted would have been quite as warm had the indulgence of the audience not been solicited on her behalf. A pure soprano organ like this, however, requires to be tenderly treated; and we sincerely hope that the undoubted success of the young vocalist will not encourage her to overtax her physical powers. Her rendering of Schubert's "Ave Maria," Mendelssohn's "Fruhlingslied," and a song by Wekerlin (given as an encore), was distinguished by a grace and tenderness which made every phrase tell; and the purity of her intonation, even in the very highest notes of her register, was so thoroughly satisfactory as to excite, even amongst the most critical listeners, the most sanguine hopes for her future. The choral triumph of the evening was Bach's Motett for double choir "The Spirit also helpeth us." The execution of this enormously difficult piece cannot be too highly praised; and the greatest credit is due to Mr. Leslie for successfully leading his forces through a composition so abstruse. The Fugue, especially, was magnificently sung; and the Chorale was given with a refinement of devotional feeling which amply proved how large an amount of earnest attention must have been bestowed, both by choir and conductor, upon its preparation. Mendelssohn's beautiful part-song "Parting and Meeting," created much effect; and "The Nightingale," of the same composer, was encored. Miss Florence May was most favourably received in her pianoforte solos, a selection from Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte," especially, exciting much applause. The Hall was filled in every part.

MUSIC IN LEIPSIC.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

The Musical Season at Leipsic is now drawing to a close, the seventeenth of the twenty Gewandhaus Concerts having already taken place. Reviewing the various events which have occurred this winter, we must specially mention the production of Kapellmeister Reinecke's second Symphony. Himself a master of world-accepted reputation, it is not to be wondered at that in this work we find a thoughtful and truthful manifestation of genuine art. While fresh and original, it contains nothing forced or strained, either in form or treatment; it is a work which deserves a long life; and although the hyper-critical Gewandhaus audience gave it a somewhat cold reception, we cannot altogether accept their verdict on the merits of so great a work. Leipsic may be said to be musically sated as no other town in the world is. For the last century, it has been the centre of music; it was the field of Bach's labours, the town of Mendelssohn's triumphs; and having heard, in many cases from their first productions, the masterpieces of our greatest musicians, many times as year after year rolled by, the art-loving populace has become so critical, that in many cases its powers of judging are over-strained, and its adoration for the old makes it unable to give a place to the new, be it never so worthy. That this audience can give such complete praise by its great applause to a Ball Suite by Franz Lachner, and can show no signs of favour to a Symphony by a composer of such eminence as Reinecke, is but a sure proof of this over-critical state.

At the 16th Concert a new Serenade, by Jadassohn (in E flat, No. 2), was performed, which likewise was of great merit. It opens with an Allegro movement, admirably scored, though rather short, which, without pause, leads into the Andante—a movement of considerable beauty; then follows the Scherzo, opening with an unison passage for strings, which leads at length into the second part, where the flutes enter in eccentric movement. The final movement, in a somewhat martial style, brings the composition to a successful conclusion.

Of other novelties we may mention two movements of the Mass in E flat by Professor Richter, Cantor of the Thomas School.

Of the various artists who have appeared at the concerts we may mention Herr Joachim, whose special contribution was Spohr's Concerto.

On Feb. 15th and 19th Herr Anton Rubinstein gave two concerts here. The first consisted entirely of his own compositions, including the Concerto in E flat, No 5, a dramatic Symphony in D minor, and five small pianoforte pieces. His second concert was a Pianoforte Recital, in which he brought forward a selection of masterpieces from Bach and Handel to Mendelssohn and Schumann. Both concerts gave great satisfaction, especially the second.

The work for production on Good Friday at the Thomas Church has been changed from Bach's "Matthew Passion" to Handel's "Messiah."

Those of our readers who have themselves been students in Leipsic will hear with regret of the death of "Old Quasdorf," Mendelssohn's faithful servant, who was also for thirty years Castellan at the Conservatorium. To all who knew how well and cheerfully he performed his duties no word in his praise is needful. The respect shown at his funeral evinced how highly he was held in the estimation of all.

We understand that Mr. Barnby, the Conductor of the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, is a candidate for the vacant musical Professorship at Cambridge.

Judging from the large audience assembled at St. James's Hall on the 29th of January, Mr. Henry King must have been well satisfied with the support of his friends at his benefit. A capital programme was provided and performed by Madlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Helen D'Alton, Miss Sophie Ferrari, Mrs. Sicklemore, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Maybrick; pianoforte, Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. Walter Bache. Mr. Henry Leslie's choir sang in the usual effective manner. The conductors were Mr. Henry Leslie, Mr. J. G. Callcott, and Mr. J. C. Ward.

Mdlle. Amanda Holmberg gave a Soirée Musicale at the Beethoven Rooms on the 12th ult., which attracted a large and appreciative audience. The singing of the concert-giver was of course the principal feature in the programme, and the applause with which she was received was in the highest degree encouraging. Mdlle. Holmberg was assisted by several eminent artists, both in the vocal and instrumental department.

Mr. Willem Coenen announces three Chamber Concerts of Modern Music, at St. George's Hall, the programmes of which contain some highly interesting specimens, chiefly selected from the works of German composers. The instrumental artists are: Pianoforte, Mr. Willem Coenen; Violin, Messrs. Wiener, Amor, M. Vogell, and Jung; Viola, Messrs. Zerbini, and A. Stehling; Violoncello, Messrs. Daubert, C. Ould, and Lasserre; and the vocalists, Madlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Sophie Ferrari, Miss Anna Williams, Madlle. Helène Arnim, Miss Julia Elton, and Miss Antoinette Sterling; Conductor, Mr. J. B. Zerbini. The concerts will commence on Thursday the 4th inst., and continue on the two following Thursdays.

At the February concert of the St. George's Glee Union, "The Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest," a Cantata, by W. H. Birch, was performed with marked success; the madrigal, "Sweet echo," and the choruses "Ave Maria," "We'll dance," and the Finale, "We'll trip it merrily," were especially well rendered. The solos were sustained by Miss Horder, and Messrs. J. R. Jekyll, R. Harvey, Stock, Ellis, Linington, and Gerald Gadsby. Miss Julia Augarde presided at the piano, and Mr. Chas. Jekyll, assistant organist at Westminster Abbey, at the harmonium. A short second Part, which included two part-songs and a song by Miss Spear, "Beautiful Summer" (encored), the Cavatina, "Or la sull'onda," admirably sung by Miss Clara Buley, and "Hybrias the Cretan," by Mr. Gadsby, brought the concert to a successful close. Mr. Garside conducted.

The death of Signor Agnesi, a vocalist so well known not only on the operatic stage, but at our provincial Festivals, and in our Metropolitan concert-rooms, will cause a gap in the ranks of baritone singers not easily filled up. He was an excellent interpreter of the florid music of the Italian school, thoroughly at home in the operas of Mozart, and had recently made a fame as an Oratorio singer, having sufficiently mastered the English language for that purpose. He was a Belgian by birth, and evinced an exceptional aptitude for music at an early age.

A little Dramatic Sketch entitled "The Ancient Britons," produced by Mr. and Mrs. German Reed at their entertainment in St. George's Hall, deserves highly favourable mention, not only for its clever construction and amusing qualities, but for the very appropriate music supplied by Mr. German Reed, which is nightly received with marked favour. Mr. Corney Grain's musical "Fairy Tale," The Enchanted Piano, is also excellent in its way, and adds materially to the attraction of the evening's programme.

The Eisteddvod of 1876, which will take place in Wrexham, promises to be the grandest ever held. From £800 to £900 is offered in prizes for competition in poetry, prose, music, arts, &c. The inhabitants have encouraged the project by raising a guarantee fund of £2,000, and no Eisteddvod has ever been known to have enlisted so much the co-operation of the nobility and gentry. An Exhibition of works of art, &c., is to be held in connection with the Eisteddvod. The proceeds are to be devoted to found a Scholarship in the Welsh University.

The recent trial of new compositions at the Musical Artists' Society, which took place at the Royal Academy of Music, fully evidenced the possession of a talent amongst our countrymen which, with such an opportunity as this Institution affords, cannot fail to assert itself. On the present occasion a String Quartett in A, by Mr. J. Lea Summers, another in G, by Mr. H. Baumer, and a Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp minor, by Mr. H. C. Banister (excellently performed by the composer) were received, as they deserved, with much favour by a most critical audience; and many vocal pieces were also given with marked success. The admirable manner in which this Society is managed should secure for it that attention and patronage which alone can render its influence permanently beneficial to the healthy development of English art.

On Tuesday, the 16th ult., a concert was given at St. John's Schools, Waterloo Road, the proceeds being in aid of the restoration of the organ at St. John's Church. A very satisfactory programme was provided, amongst the most prominent attractions of which were the vocal pieces of Mrs. Miles Doughty, Miss R. Lee, Mrs. Cushett, Messrs. Knapp and Courtney, and the Drayton Family; the latter elicited much applause. The pianoforte accompaniments were well given by Miss C. Nott and others.

A series of Organ Recitals are being given by the Managers of the Bow and Bromley Institute on Saturday evenings. Amongst the well-known performers who have already appeared we may mention Mr. F. Archer, Mr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. A. Carder, and Mr. W. H. Monk. The Recitals are interspersed with vocal solos, which have been rendered by Miss Helen Standish, Miss Minnie Curtis, Messrs. Stedman, Chaplin Henry, &c. The audiences have been large and appreciative. The managers deserve support in their endeavours to provide music of a high class at a cheap rate of admission.

A very successful concert was given at St. James's Hall on the 16th ult., in aid of the Metropolitan District Telegraph Messengers' Band Fund. Several well-known artists appeared, including Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Josè Sherrington, Liebhart, Mott, Messrs. Vernon Rigby, Stedman, Lewis Thomas, Chaplin Henry, and J. C. Kent. The conductors were Messrs. W. H. Thomas, Henry Parker, W. H. Callcott, and Michael Watson, and the bandmaster Mr. H. R. Edwards. So many people were unable to obtain admission that a repetition of the concert is announced.

On Friday evening, the 5th ult., the second concert of the season was given by the Crouch End Choral Society, at the Drill Hall, Crouch End. The vocalists were Mrs. Alfred Dye, Messrs. Stedman and A. G. Lawson; solo violin, Mr. Grimson. The first part was sacred, and comprised "Angels, ever bright and fair," "In native worth," "Honour and arms," "Judge me, O God," &c. The second part consisted of ballads, part-songs, &c. Mrs. A. Dye and Mr. Stedman were encored in the duet "Ah morir" (Ernani), and were also very successful in a duet, "Maying," by Alice Mary Smith. Mr. Stedman gave a new song by Mr. A. Dye, entitled "Love's offering," in which he was accompanied by the composer, and which was much appreciated. Two violin solos by Mr. Grimson, and several part-songs by the choir were also performed with good effect. Mr. A. Dye conducted, and also played Beethoven's Sonata Pathétique, as a piano solo.

We have been informed that several eminent vocalists have kindly consented to give their services at a concert in aid of the Commercial Travellers' Benevolent Institution; and it is hoped that many instrumentalists will grant the same favour. It is also anticipated that large wholesale firms in the City will aid the undertaking by every means in their power.

An old relic of the Hanover Square Rooms has departed. James Fitzgerald, the carriage attendant for the last thirty years at the Queen's Concert Rooms, and for many years at the Royal Academy of Music, died on the 4th ult., (aged 74). He was the oldest man in that line of business, and was well known and much respected.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

The Chandos Te Deum, in vocal score, composed about the year 1719, by G. F. Handel. Edited, and the pianoforte arrangement by Joseph Barnby.

It is as though the deathless Handel were born again into the world, to have this magnificent work reproduced, of which even the name has passed out of general knowledge, and the music itself is totally unknown. Dr. Busby, who has been for many years deceased, writes, "It is forty years since I heard them at Covent Garden by Dr. Arnold; my ear still retains the impression of their charm, and my mind of their grandeur," in allusion to the two settings of the Te Deum and the twelve orchestral anthems, composed by the master during his residence with the Duke of Chandos, at Cannons, a few miles up the Edgware Road, between 1718 and 1720. This helps one to guess how very long time has elapsed since the great works in question have been heard in public. The present Te Deum is the setting in B flat, which has not, we believe, been printed with pianoforte accompaniment till now. To dismiss this accompaniment with a word, we must use a strong one, and say it is in every respect admirable, being well fitted to the instrument and highly effective. As to the work itself, we may confidently state that the composer never surpassed it; for elaboration, for fire, for power, for effect, and for poetical treatment of the subject, it would be all alone in excellence, but that Handel himself wrote other works, which, and which only, can compare with it.

The first number is a Chorus, of which to say that it is Handelian is appropriately to use a word that has been adopted into our language to define the utmost of musical grandeur. The next is a Chorus interspersed with Solos beginning in E flat, "All the earth," with that picturesque treatment of the words for which the author is remarkable, that gives in this case an idea of the concurrence of vast multitudes in the act of worship. Continuous of this, "To Thee all angels" is given first by a solo alto, and presently by the full choir. A soprano Solo at the words "To Thee, Cherubin," and the repetitions of this sentence, flows on with a meaning sufficiently obvious, through the truly sublime ejaculations of the chorus on the thrice "Holy;" and the sequel of the universal song is unbroken. The movement ends in B flat, and so is a pendant of the first, rather than an independent piece. No. 3, "The glorious company," assigns each description of the lauding throngs to a solo voice, and the chorus personifies these with its joyful vociferation of "Praise Thee." The acknowledgment by the holy Church has a full-voiced statement, and the three articles of belief, set to a change of movement, are so rendered as to give essentially the figure of Trinity in Unity by the working together of the themes appropriated to each, the expression here being solemn in the highest degree. The Chorus, "Thou art the King" has a fugal treatment of each section of the text, both of which are closely elaborated. No. 5, the only Air, is for treble, and is a charmingly melodious setting of the section, "When Thou tookest," which beautifully contrasts the majestic breadth of the foregoing. The next passage is set as an unaccompanied Quartett with exquisite tenderness; it is one of those fantasia movements wherein the course of modulation is entirely free, being directed solely by the course of the expression. "Thou didst open" breaks in with excellent brightness, the full body of voices and the brilliant key of C helping the animation of the idea to complete the musical picture. New means were necessary to the prolongation of the scene of heavenly glory, if this was to be effected without monotony; a series of Solos accordingly introduces "Thou sittest at the right hand," in which the singers' personality opens a new interest, and the chorus enters presently as the culmination of the thought, and then the iterating of the word "Thou" seems forcibly to declare that He singly, who is addressed, owns the seat of highest distinction. No. 9, "We believe" is deeply pathetic; the exclamation of the word "help," occurring again and again through the continuance of other phrases, is beautifully suggestive. The next number comprises two movements, "Day by day" being given out with great vigour, and "And we worship" being set as a powerful fugue. It is a notable point in the design of the whole, that the key of D, with all its glittering characteristics, is reserved for this return to the act of praise. The transition into G minor helps greatly to the tone of plaintive deprecation that marks the next number, which is begun by a solo tenor, to be afterwards joined by the chorus. Who knows the wonderful treatment of this passage, "Vouchsafe, O Lord," in the popular work to commemorate the victory of Dettingen, may think that no other music could render it with equal interest; but let them know this, and they will perceive that it is as like the other in beauty as it is unlike it in notes. It curiously anticipates a rhythmical and harmonic point in "Farewell, ye limpid," an Air in Jephthah, the master's latest production, written forty years after the present work. No 13, is the final Chorus, a noble piece of fugue writing, and a fitting end to a glorious composition. "O Lord, in Thee" is set to a fine broad subject in B flat, which is copiously worked before the introduction of a second subject in F, "Let me never," which, having been elaborated alone, is then combined with the former, and the complexity of the fugue is increased while its clearness is undiminished by the addition of yet another theme to the first words.

Now that the oratorio is menaced with expulsion from the church, it is the right moment to call upon every person who has a voice in the administration of musico-ecclesiastical affairs, to seize upon such works as this, few, very few as they are, and bring them into standard use for festal occasions, before the highest class of music be exiled from her native home, and a precedent becomes established for excluding every work of our art from holy uses that exceeds a limited number of minutes in performance, or requires more than a limited number of executants. It would be vain to conjecture as to whose is the disgrace that the great work before us has been for tens upon tens of years unheard in Church service; the loss has been all theirs who have had no opportunity to hear its performance; nay, more, it has been theirs too who might have been stimulated by its magnificent example, if never to bring forth music equal to Handel's, at least to aim at the mighty mark, to raise themselves while exalting their art, and to do much for the true edification of the world at large.

Handel's Jubilate, composed for the peace of Utrecht in the year 1713, in vocal score, with a separate accompaniment for the pianoforte, arranged by W. T. Best.

"Queen Anne is dead," and some things that were great and good in her days, if they survived her for a while, have not come down to our time. One of these was the practice, that when an event of great public interest befell, there was straightway a grand celebration of the same, wherein music held a conspicuous place. So, the many years' war in which all Europe had been involved, came to an end on the 31st of March, 1713, the treaty between England and France was signed on the 7th of April, preparations were then set on foot for a public thanksgiving at which Her Majesty with both the Houses of Parliament was to be present, and Handel was engaged to compose a Service for the occasion. The solemnity took place on the 7th of July, but whether in St. Paul's Cathedral or in St. James's Chapel Royal is uncertain. The music of Handel is now identified with the circumstance that called it forth, in being distinguished by the name of Utrecht, the place of the agreement for the peace and the signing of the treaty. In our own time, wars have been in the Crimea, in India, in Ashantee, and peaces have been ratified under the auspices of a sovereign lady; but people had to offer up their private thanks from their own homes, and no great artist has been permitted the opportunity to build himself a reputation by doing honour to these events. It is asserted that art is at a low ebb in England—an assertion that is easier than its proof; but as little as there can be great Generals without wars, so little can there be great musicians without occasion for the exercise of their artistry. It was the habit of old, happily revived in these last years, to engage a complete orchestra for the solemnisation of most important occasions in our royal and mother churches; hence, Purcell's Service and his Anthems, the Anthems by Weldon, and the ecclesiastical music by Handel, are written for the full band in addition to the complement of solo and choral voices. The Utrecht Jubilate, accordingly requires all the instruments for its performance that were in use a hundred and sixty years ago; but this is not an insuperable hindrance to its presentation now, since, like other works by the same mighty composer and by others, its accompaniments are susceptible of adaptation to the organ. That it is so little known and so never performed is a subject for wonder, since it is all as fine as, while very far shorter than, the Dettingen Te Deum, so that it is even more available than that masterpiece for high church festivals. Nay, it would be difficult to discover a more noble composition from the hand of its great author; and, if not from his, from whose workmanship might its parallel be sought! One might suppose that, having been only able to display his power among us in the lightest forms of the Italian opera, Handel seized the first opportunity to assert himself in the severest class of music, and to prove himself as gigantic as he had previously been charming. We rarely, even in his oratorios, meet with such careful elaboration as is here manifest; and it is not the severity of scholarship more than the vitality of genius that gives superlative interest to the composition. The alto Solo of the opening seems to call upon the nation to unite in triumphant rejoicing, and the chorus then takes up the strain like the many-voiced uttering of a great people, conscious of right and certain of victory. Sequent upon this superb Introduction, is a fugue on two subjects—the first florid, to the words, "Serve the Lord with gladness," the second in long notes that peal trumpet-tongued through the massy counterpoint of the other, to the words "and come before His presence with a song." Much of this is in six vocal parts, with occasionally independent orchestral accompaniment; but, with a freedom that some contrapuntal writers (Bach for instance) never allowed themselves, Handel sometimes joins several of these parts in unison to give prominence to the second subject, and thus in spirit anticipates a principle of modern orchestration, which sanctions the duplication of voice with voice, and instrument with instrument, to bring out a significant point. This piece is in D, as are many of the same jubilant character by the author, being written with evident regard to the broad brilliancy of string instruments in a key that includes all their open notes, and to the then normal key of the trumpet, which seems not to have been pitched in F, as at present, until long after. A Duet in A minor, for alto and bass, follows, "Be ye sure" which is cheerful and hearty, in spite or by reason of its greatly misunderstood modal minority. The imitative style of the voice writing is animated in effect while grave in manner. The next piece, a four-part Chorus in F, is a prodigy of art. The first subject, "O go your way," is worked at first as a canon in the 4th and 8th below and 5th above; another subject, "and into His courts," is then introduced, and presently worked against the first; anon, a third independent theme, "Be thankful unto Him" gives further variety to this admirably diversified piece; and when the three are wrought together, there is an effect of sublimity not to be surpassed. True to the Cathedral uses of the day, there is a trio for alto, tenor, and bass, "For the Lord is gracious." It was then common to dissociate the adult singers from the boys for solo pieces of the character of this, wherein the attraction lies more in the closeness of the vocal responses than in the melodious beauty or the expression. Not rarely in his after works does our composer suffer such sympathetic words as these to elude his equally sympathetic treatment; here is another appropriation of the minor mode to cheerful use, but we admire more than we are carried away by the music. Perhaps the grandest portion of the whole is the "Glory," forming the final chorus in two movements. In eight parts, the voices sustain the word of exultation for many bars, during the diverse motion of all the instruments; again and again this is iterated, each time on a different chord, and then the threefold name of the Deity is enunciated with the same stupendous grandeur. The fugal treatment of "As it was" is interspersed with exclamatory Amens in plain counterpoint, and the two styles excellently relieve each other. Then, all the string instruments with the bass voices have a long extended passage of quavers supporting the minims of the other four voices, the effect of which is tumultuous beyond description.

Now that there is an edition within the scope of everybody's purchase, with a thoroughly practicable and highly-effective arrangement of this truly grand work, let us hope that it may not remain a thing of name only, but come into Church use on many a festive occasion, to dilate the hearts of the hearers and to add honour even to the name of Handel.

The Lord will comfort Zion. An Anthem for four voices, composed by Henry Hiles, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

The first movement, set to Isaiah li. 8, is a chorus. It is melodious in all the parts, and charmingly harmonised. Then there is a Quartett, of which the words are taken from Revelation xxi. 4, that is sufficiently self-complete to bear separation from the rest, and sufficiently interesting to make this sometimes desirable. The use of the low C for the first treble voice is injudicious, for the note has mostly a rough tone, and to produce it unfits the singer for the employment of the upper notes which mostly prevail. For the concluding chorus the text reverts to Isaiah lii. 3, 8. The latter verse is given to the adult voices in unison, and the earlier words follow it, set as a very free fugue, in which the showy effects of modern harmony more abound than contrapuntal elaboration. The work has great merit and will add largely to Dr. Hiles's deserved and growing reputation.

Swift the shades of eve are falling. Part-song.
The Eagle. Part-song.
The Vikings and the Northwind. Part-song.
Composed by Berthold Tours.

These three part-songs, forming Nos. 8, 10 and 12 of the "Collegiate Series," are amongst the very best specimens of this class of composition which have yet come before us; and, considering the enormous number constantly forwarded for review, this may be accepted as a warm tribute to their worth. So many smoothly harmonised melodies are supposed, both by composers and audience, to be genuine Part-songs in the present day, that we are grateful to a musician like Mr. Tours for reminding us of the distinct character these pieces should possess; and sincerely hope that during the approaching season the merits of his three new compositions may be revealed to the public by the excellent choir under the direction of Mr. Leslie. The themes of the songs are as thoroughly varied in feeling as the words demand, a proof that the composer is, as he should be, a poet at heart. "Swift the shades of eve are falling" has a placid melody, charmingly harmonised; and some beautiful effects are gained by the alternation of major and minor, the delicate shades of expression in the poetry being happily reflected in the music throughout. We especially like the final phrase where, contrary to all conventional ideas of the method of fitting words to music, the melody ascends an octave on the word "descending." "The Eagle" begins with a bold and well-marked subject, followed by a more animated theme, commencing in the relative minor. There is much dramatic feeling in the treatment of the words, "and cowers low in the covert nigh;" and, after the andante theme, in the tonic minor, the return to the major has an exceedingly fresh effect. The third song on our list is simple in construction, and perhaps hardly equal to those already noticed; but the spirited opening, in E minor, unharmonised, well announces the subject of the poetry; and the tranquil phrase, in the tonic major, which concludes each verse, gives a truthful and vivid colouring to the words.

Fantasia, in E flat, for the Organ. Composed by Auguste Moosmair.

Great skill in the mastery of technical difficulties is displayed in this composition. We cannot so freely applaud the taste which has led the writer to intermingle with his clever counterpoint, chromatic passages of a wholly different and widely discrepant character; they show his versatility, perhaps, but an artist should be one-minded while engaged on one subject. The merit of the piece lies less in its ideas than in their treatment, and we are consequently more interested in the one than charmed by the other. The Fantasia comprises three movements, each of which is complete in itself. The Introduction is a kind of frame, wherein is set the hymn tune, "O Ewigkeit du Donnerwort," with an arpeggiated accompaniment, and afterwards an effective Variation on the same, the preludial bars recurring at the end so as to class, one may say, the sacred melody as in a circle. Happy in their hymnody are the natives of North Germany, who name their choral tunes by the poems that are sung to them, and thus are reminded of the inseparable words whenever they hear the music, and feel accordingly a special meaning in any artistry that may be exercised upon them. Happy are they in comparison with us poor islanders, who know the choral songs of worship only, if we know them, by such unsignifying titles as "Jeroboam," or "Little Puddlington," or "Wapping New," or the like, and sing them indifferently to any, grave or gay, penitential or jubilant verses with the needful number of syllables, regardless totally of their fitness of accent. Happy are the musicians who choose any of these things for elaboration, since in working upon them they have an idea to embody, and not merely to construct an exercise upon an inexpressive thesis. We fail to perceive in what respect the "Introduction" so called, introduces the sequel. Be that as it may, the Andante in C minor is a contrast as much to the foregoing as to the fugue which concludes the whole, and which decidedly is an evidence of musicianship in the author. The Fantasia is capitally fitted to the instrument.

By the Sea. Reverie, for the Pianoforte.
Minuet and Trio, for the Pianoforte.
Composed by T. Ridley Prentice.

These quiet and unobtrusive contributions to the pianoforte music of the day sufficiently prove that Mr. Prentice is content to work his way upward, rather than, by beginning at the top, to run the chance of a gradual descent. "By the sea" has a calm, flowing subject, with a pedal bass, happily suggestive of the title of the piece. The theme, in the subdominant, with the characteristic accompaniment, is well contrasted with the opening melody; and the composer has prudently steered clear of those sensational executive effects which are too often used, regardless of their artistic propriety, to "work up" a composition to a brilliant climax. We heartily recommend this little Reverie to all amateur pianists who aim rather to please, than to astonish, their hearers. The "Minuet and Trio" will also be most acceptable both to teachers and players, for it is melodious and carefully written throughout. Although calling up reminiscences of Beethoven, especially in the Trio, it is good enough to stand upon its own merits; and if Mr. Prentice can be as successful in the other movements of a Sonata as he has been in this one (which we see no reason to doubt), we may shortly hope to welcome him in a composition of more importance.

When the tide comes in. Song. Words by H. Ashland Kean.
Thou whom my heart adoreth. Song. Words by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A.
Composed by Joseph Barnby.

The first of these songs has been sung by Miss Antoinette Sterling, and the second by Madame Patey, at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, and always with a success which, apart from their purely artistic merits, proves that they contain the elements of popularity. The first is a pathetic little story, the musical colouring of which is so delicately touched as to evidence the sympathy of the composer with the poet. The harmonies are just as simple as a song depending so much for its effect upon the elocutionary powers of the vocalist, should be. The minor third, touched for the first time in the brief recitative, foreshadows the tragic nature of the final incident with much fidelity. "Thou whom my heart adoreth" is a melodious ballad, which will be a boon to contralto singers who, like Madame Patey, can not only feel the words themselves, but make their audience feel them. The frequent use of the raised supertonic in the voice part is a characteristic of the song which cannot fail to be remarked; but we object no more to the individuality of a composer than to the style of an author, and can assure our readers that the musicianlike treatment of this composition will ensure it a ready acceptance with the public.

The Lament of the Border Widow. An old Scotch song. Composed by Jacques Blumenthal.

This is truly a lament, the wild beauty of the melody seeming to spring spontaneously from the words, as indeed all such legendary compositions should do, where the object is rather to heighten the effect of the verses than to display the learning of the composer. A wailing melody, in G minor, is left but lightly accompanied at the commencement, the bold phrase, in the relative major being admirably contrasted with the opening subject, and the descent of sevenths in the voice-part expressing the passionate phrases with much force. Miss Antoinette Sterling, has already created a marked effect in this song at the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall.

Christmas Bells at Sea. Song. Words by Charles Lamb Kenney. Music by Arthur Sullivan.

This is another of the songs given at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts, and sung by Mr. Whitney. The words, which are excellently adapted for music, are founded upon a legend amongst sailors that on Christmas Eve the usual peal which ushers in the great Christian Festival is sometimes heard, however far from land the ship may be, and is a certain sign of a prosperous voyage. Mr. Sullivan has wedded the verses to some exceedingly appropriate music, the bells being made sufficiently prominent to suggest the leading feature of the song. Like all this composer's vocal works, the harmonies give much richness to the melody, without disturbing that calmness so essential to the due effect of the words.

Augener and Co.

Suite: Preludio, Fuga, Andante Affettuoso, Presto Spiccato, Allegretto Scherzando, Adagio and Finale; for the Pianoforte. Composed by James C. Culwick.

The sale of a composition in this severely classical form must of necessity be so extremely limited that we fear Mr. Culwick must seek his reward in the consciousness of having worked rather for the art than the public. When we say that his music is somewhat dry, we have nothing but praise left for the result of his efforts. The flowing Prelude, in E minor, and the following Fugue, in the tonic major, show that the composer has studied in a good school, the points of the Fugue, especially, being well marked, and the writing throughout evidencing sound contrapuntal knowledge. The "Andante" has not a very amiable subject, and we should prefer fewer extensions—many of which will scarcely repay the trouble which must be bestowed upon them—but the movement displays design, and a commendable care in the management of the part-writing. The "Presto Spiccato," although spirited, we like less than the following "Allegretto Scherzando," in 6-4 rhythm, the subject of which is exceedingly melodious. The "Adagio" and "Finale" conclude the "Suite" with much effect; but, as we have already said, considering the artistic skill displayed, throughout the work, we wish that the themes had been more attractive.

Gleanings from the Works of celebrated Composers. Transcriptions for the Pianoforte, by E. Pauer.

The name on the title-page of these Transcriptions will be a sufficient guarantee for the excellence of the workmanship, a matter of the utmost importance to purchasers; for, although arranging pieces for the Pianoforte, originally written for other instruments, would appear to be an easy matter, considering how often it is undertaken by mere tyros in the art, there can be little doubt that judgment, experience, and, above all, conscientiousness, are positively essential for the due performance of the task. Amongst the eight numbers of this series already published, there is not a single weak one; all are selected from the compositions of the best writers, and so carefully considered as to form most effective little pieces for drawing-room performance. Were we called upon to name our especial favourites, we should mention No. 1, Rondo from Beethoven's Quintett, Op. 16; No. 4, Andante from Mozart's Concerto in A major; No. 6, Spohr's Barcarolle, in G major; and No. 8, an Andante by the same composer, in F major; but pianists cannot very well go wrong, for whichever number is chosen will be certain to prove a treasure.

The Philosophy of Voice: showing the right and wrong action of voice in speech and song. By Charles Lunn.

This book is a reprint of several papers published in the Medical Press and Circular, and the author can therefore, perhaps, scarcely expect that in a Journal expressly devoted to Music any justice can be done to an Essay upon the subject of which, he admits, the majority of singing-masters are in error. That great and glorious vocalists have been made in spite of the want of what Mr. Lunn would term a knowledge of "voice production," cannot of course be denied; but we willingly confess that this must not be accepted as a proof that we are to stand still and refuse to hear what even the most Utopian of our reformers have to say to us upon the subject, for in many of these cases it is unquestionable that Nature has done the greater part of the work before science was appealed to. Mr. Lunn is one of the most earnest and conscientious thinkers of the day and has a right, not only to be heard, but to be answered. This work contains the result of many years' reflection; and as we can scarcely imagine that its writer publishes it for the sake of profit, his only reward can be in the consciousness of having fulfilled a duty by calling attention to an important branch of art which he believes to have been hitherto but imperfectly understood. Without following our author through his elaborate investigations, let us then urge those who are competent to grapple with the subject to give Mr. Lunn's book a calm and dispassionate consideration, even should his arguments run counter to convictions which the growth of years may seem to have rendered almost too sacred to disturb.

Duff and Stewart.

Sixty Solfeggi and Vocal Exercises. Composed by Franz Abt.

This work will be found extremely useful by professors who wish to teach their pupils all that is really useful, without wearying them, as is too often the case, with exercises, which are merely melodious pieces, without any sufficiently distinctive character. Instead of giving major triads in a major key, and minor triads in a minor key, we think it would have been better to show the two kinds of triads together in one key, as pupils are too apt to consider that major keys only contain major triads, and minor keys minor triads; and—to finish our objections—we question whether teaching the commencement of a shake by dotting the principal note and singing the upper one short, is a good method for acquiring a perfectly even trill afterwards. In other respects, the book is exactly to our mind; the Exercises are exceedingly well accompanied, and each little piece has a definite object.

Daldy, Isbister and Co.

Songs of our Youth. By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Set to music.

This very elegant little volume, merely inscribed "To my old Friends," is chiefly remarkable for the poetry, the music to which it is allied being generally culled from various sources, and in many cases not being especially well selected. In some of the songs the words and melody are said to be by "D. M. M."; and, as a rule, we are inclined to think that these are the best in the book, both verses and music running together in loving company throughout. The volume is beautifully bound; and, apart from any poetical or musical attraction, we may recommend it as a show-book for the drawing-room table. A little interest, too, may be excited by the musical puzzle on the cover—three perfect fifths, followed by a triplet—we should be glad if some person could decipher this mystery; we have given it up.

Speakers, Singers and Stammerers. By Frederick Helmore.

When we say that Mr. Helmore has mastered the subject upon which he writes, we are giving him praise which cannot conscientiously be awarded to very many of those who, having given a few lessons in singing, think themselves competent to grapple with the whole theory of voice production. Both in speaking and singing, some very valuable truths are here laid down; and the reasons for the rules which are given are in all cases stated distinctly enough to carry conviction to the mind of an intelligent student. Facts, indeed, are stubborn things, and if what our author affirms is really true, those who wish to cultivate their voice in the right way, have but a poor chance of doing so: "There are plenty of singing-masters," says Mr. Helmore, "who can teach style and brilliancy to pupils who have previously learnt how to produce the notes; but I have not met with more than three English teachers who could 'form' a voice, and one of them is dead."

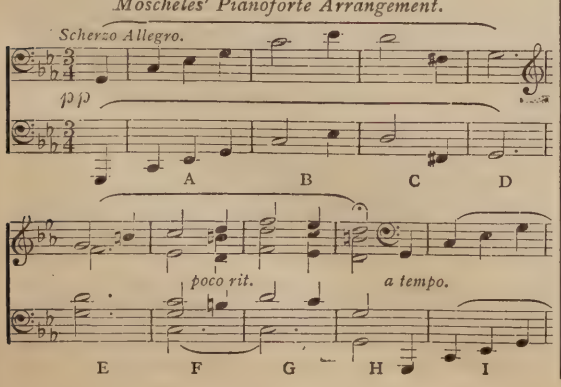
ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

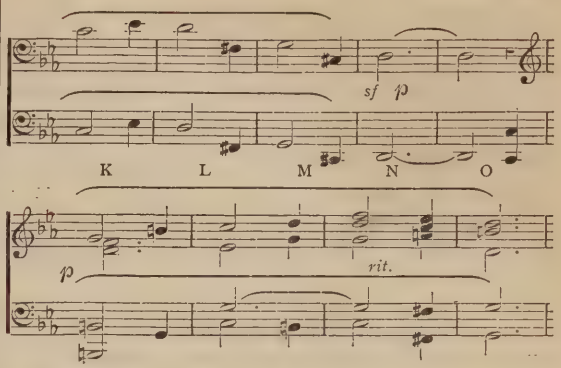
MEDDLING WITH THE OLD MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

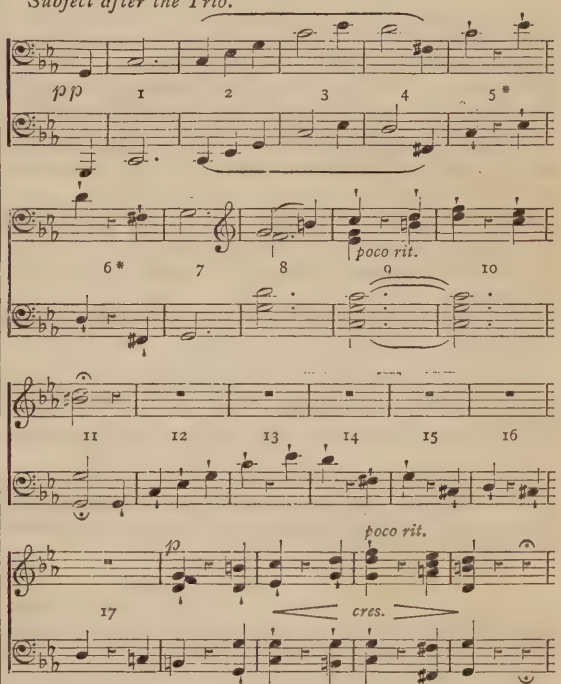
Sir,—I have noticed with much regret the increasing mania for meddling with the works of the great composers. If matters go on at the present rate the time will not be far distant when it will be impossible to obtain them in their original shape. Those who do the mischief may be divided into three classes: first, those who wish honestly to improve, but are too hasty, and overlook why things are written contrary to their own notions; secondly, those who are so filled with vanity that they fancy they understand the management of the works as well as the authors themselves; and, lastly, editors who correct the proofs of their so-called revised editions with so much carelessness that new mistakes and omissions creep constantly in, of which the composers could have never dreamt. I will give the following example as one of the most vexing: One day some wisehead, perhaps well up in Greek, Latin and mathematics, but with no idea of the artistic conditions pertaining to a musical work, fancied that there are two bars too much in the Scherzo of Beethoven's Symphony in C minor. Without studying whether his fancy is correct, he cuts out the bars; and some conductors, not wishing to be thought less intelligent, take to the trimming directly without even troubling their heads whether it is a justifiable operation or not. I beg now to submit the passage in the Scherzo as it is written before the C major part (called Trio), and as it occurs subsequently and intentionally altered in the rhythm by the great composer. I give the original version as played at Beethoven's time, and for something like half a century:—

Moscheles' Pianoforte Arrangement.





Subject after the Trio.



It is obvious that the second treatment of the subject after the "Trio" is different from the first, and the person who cut out bars 5* and 6*, to be logical, ought to have erased bar 1 on the same principle, because bars 1 and 2 are not identical with A and B, nor are 15, 16, and 17 like M, N and O. It may be further observed that the two bars taken away are a variation from 3 and 4, first legato, then with separated and staccato notes. To destroy thus a phrase so characteristic of Beethoven's manner is simply barbarous, and I fervently hope that all persons of any artistic taste and reverence for genius will unite in their efforts to have the piece performed as Beethoven composed it, and listen no more to bombastic meddlers.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Feb. 16, 1875. Allegro.

THE WAGNER THEORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I wish to ask "Verring" two questions:—

1. Does he gravely mean to assert that when Gluck began to apply his art-theory—which, I think it is generally conceded, Wagner is merely re-propounding—in the composition of his operatic works, he did it unconsciously, or, as "Verring" puts it, intuitively? It is, or should be, unnecessary to remind him that the word "theory" implies a conscious effort of the reasoning faculties.

2. Granting that the few who supported Gluck's "art-work" had to fight many a hard battle round his standard, is it now being "borne triumphantly," or, in plain English, is there anything in Gluck's operas (which were once regarded as revolutionary, as Wagner's now are) to distinguish them from the subsequent works of less philosophical writers, unless it be that the flow of melody is greater, the flow of harmony purer?

Yours faithfully,

Lincoln's Inn, Feb. 11. F. C.

[No doubt "Verring" will reply to the above queries in the next number of our Journal; but in the meantime we may inform F. C. that our correspondent is a lady.—ED. Musical Times.]

THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I understand from the current number of the Musical Times, that the friends of Thomas Lloyd Fowle, M.A. and Mus. Doc., are endeavouring to obtain for him a pension on the Civil List of the Government. It is not my intention to say one word on the question of Mr. Fowle's claims to such a substantial recognition, but I think as a preliminary step to any agitation in his favour, it is absolutely necessary for his own credit, that he should give a public explanation of the grounds on which he affixes M.A. and Mus. Doc. to his name.

As one of the mere handful of men who hold both these honourable degrees, I consider no apology is needed for thus bringing this subject forward, and I believe in so doing I shall have the moral support of my brother musical graduates.

I ask Mr. Fowle then, to set all doubts at rest by stating in your next—

1. At what University he graduated?
2. How long he resided at his University?
3. How many examinations he has passed, and in what subjects?
4. By whom was he examined, and does he possess any "Testamur?"
5. Was he ever a B.A. and Mus. Bac?

If Mr. Fowle's answers to these very simple questions are satisfactory, I will gladly apologize for having thus dragged him before the bar of public opinion.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN STAINER,

M.A., Mus. Doc., Magd. Coll., Oxon.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BIRMINGHAM.—The third of Messrs. Harrison's subscription popular concerts took place in the Town Hall on the 29th January. The vocalists were Mdlle. Titiens, Mdme. Trebelli-Bettini, Mdlle. Risarelli, Signori Paladini, Catalani, and Perkins; solo pianist and accompanist, Mr. F. H. Cowen; solo violinist, M. Colyns. Mdlle. Titiens, who was warmly received, sang "Placida notte" from Il Talismano and "Kathleen Mavourneen," and as an encore to the last, "The Minstrel Boy." Mdme. Trebelli, who was in fine voice, gave "C'est l'Espagne," which was enthusiastically encored. The duet "Quis est homo" was splendidly sung by Mdlle. Titiens and Mdme. Trebelli. The programme also included "The Watchman," by Signor Perkins; the "Rose Song," by Signor Paladini; and a violin solo, "Le Carnival de Venice," by M. Colyns, and other pieces of a popular character.——MR. MAPLESON gave a sacred concert in the Town Hall on the 10th ult. The programme consisted of the Stabat Mater in the first part, and selections from Rossini's Messe Solennelle in the second. The soloists were the same as at Messrs. Harrison's concert.

BISHOPS STORTFORD.—The Choral Society gave its opening concert on the 3rd ult. in the Corn Exchange, to a large and select audience. The first part consisted of a selection from Handel's Oratorio the Messiah. The soloists were Miss Harvey and Miss Dodd (members of the Society), Master Cross, of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Mr. E. J. Bilton (alto), Mr. W. B. Ling (tenor), and Mr. Harvey Day (bass), of Trinity College, Cambridge. Miss Harvey and Miss Dodd were very efficient in their solos, and great praise is due to Master Cross for his singing of "He shall feed His flock." Messrs. Bilton, Ling and Day rendered their respective solos in a very able manner, and were enthusiastically applauded. The choruses were given with great precision, the "Hallelujah Chorus" being especially well rendered. In the second part madrigals and part-songs by Mendelssohn, Pearsall and Ions were sung by the Society (unaccompanied) in a very creditable manner. Pinsuti's quartett, "In this hour," was rendered by Miss Harvey and Messrs. Bilton, Ling, and Day, and received an enthusiastic encore. A like compliment was paid to Mr. Day and Mr. Ling. Mr. Thomas Silver presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. A. Perry at the harmonium. Mr. H. J. Brown, of Cambridge, conducted throughout with his usual ability.

BLACKHEATH.—An amateur concert was given at the Alexandra Hall on Monday evening the 8th ult., before a numerous audience, the proceeds being devoted to the charitable purpose of obtaining the admission of an aged lady into the Governess's Benevolent Institution. The concert was under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Joseph Frost, who also played Beethoven's "Sonata Pathètique" and "May day," a composition of his own. Miss Leslie's artistic singing of "Auld Robin Gray" and "She wore a wreath of roses," formed a notable feature of the programme. The part-songs were very carefully rendered by well-known local amateurs; "Where wavelets rippled gaily," and "Good night, beloved," by Pinsuti, Martini's "Tickling Trio," and Mr. Frost's trio for ladies' voices, "Autumn leaves," being received by the audience with manifest favour.

BRENTWOOD.—Mr. Henry Morley, R.A.M., gave a concert in the Town Hall on the 11th ult., assisted by Miss Banks, Miss Lina Glover, and Mr. James (vocalist), and Miss Morley (pianoforte). The programme, which was miscellaneous, was exceedingly well rendered, and the concert highly successful.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. E. H. Thorne gave a pianoforte and violin Recital at the Royal Pavilion on the 3rd ult. The programme was well selected, comprising works of Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, and Bennett, and some new compositions by the concert-giver, the principal of these being a sonata (in F major) for pianoforte and violin, in which the composer was associated with Mr. Henry Holmes. Mr. Thorne also played Chopin's Nocturne in G major, and the "Rondo piacevole" of the late lamented Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, in memory of whom Mr. Thorne, at the close of the Recital, played Chopin's "Marche funèbre," a fitting mark of respect to one of England's highest musical spirits. Mr. Thorne joined Mr. Holmes in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat for pianoforte and violin (Op. 12, No. 3), which was excellently played; and with Miss Thorne gave a couple of pianoforte duets Mr. Holmes contributed solos, amongst them the Giga in G minor by Corelli.——A MEETING was held at the Town Hall on Friday evening, the 5th ult., for the purpose of forming a new local Society, having for its object the giving of concerts somewhat similar to those given in London by Henry Leslie's Choir. At the meeting it was decided that the musical direction should be entrusted to Mr. Worsley Staniforth (organist of Trinity and for some years at S. Paul's), and that the Society should be named and known as "Mr. Staniforth's Choir." Already the support of several of the nobility and gentry has been promised, and there is every hope that the enterprise will prove highly successful.—MR. KUHE'S entertainment, which now appears to be known as the "Brighton Musical Festival," has this year been as successful as ever. Bach's Passion (St. Matthew), Costa's Oratorio, Naaman (conducted by the composer), Macfarren's Oratorio, St. John the Baptist, J. F. Barnett's orchestral piece, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and M. Gounod's Cantata, Gallia, have been among the principal important works given. Mr. Kuhe's pianoforte performances have been, as usual, an attractive feature, but in every department the best artists have been engaged, and in all respects the spirited originator of this annual gathering deserves the utmost credit for his exertions.

BURSLEM.—The Potteries Tonic Sol-fa Choristers gave their second concert of the season in the Town Hall on the 4th ult., in the presence of a large and fashionable audience. The artists engaged were Miss Josè Sherrington, Madame Poole, Mr. Nelson Varley, and Mr. Wadmore, vocalists; Madame Varley-Liebe, solo violin; and Mr. Charles Malcolm, solo pianoforte. The choristers opened each part with an unaccompanied chorus. The programme was very well rendered, and the concert was one of the most enjoyable of the season. Mr. Powell conducted.

CATTISTOCK.—A concert was given in the School-room on the 26th January, under the direction of Mr. J. Manley, organist of the church. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Stedman and Mr. Manley. The quartetts, trios, &c., were sung by Messrs. Manley, Riggs, Dunford, Nobbs, Williams, Hawkins, Sprackling, and Goddard, the full choruses being strengthened by several girls of the school singing-class. A "Duo Concertante," by Osborne and De Beriot, was effectively played by Mr. T. Avant (pianoforte), and Mr. W. Stone (violin). The programme was well rendered, many of the numbers being encored, and the concert was most successful.

Clevedon.—A new organ, of two manuals, twenty stops, and seven composition pedals, built by Messrs. Allen and Co., of Bristol, was opened at Christ Church, by Mr. George Riseley, organist of the Colston Hall, Bristol, on the 5th ult.

Dundee.—The third and last orchestral concert for the season took place on the 17th ult. Professor Oakeley's newly-scored "Funeral March" and his "Edinburgh March" were excellently performed under the composer's own direction. The "Funeral March" was played in memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett. The programme also comprised Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony, Nicolai's overture to the Merry Wives of Windsor, and Sir W. S. Bennett's fantasia overture, Paradise and the Peri. The vocalists were Mr. Pearson and Mr. Whitney. Mr. Nagel conducted.

Edinburgh.—The eighth concert of the Choral Union took place on the 2nd ult., when an excellent programme was well rendered. Mr. Sutcliffe, the vocalist, has a good and well trained tenor voice, whose sweetness makes up for want of power. The performance of Chopin's Concerto in F minor by Herr F. Orosz, was in every respect most excellent. An interesting novelty in the programme was the Symphony in B flat by Gade. Dr. Oakeley's Funeral March came most apropos of the sad and lamented death of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett. If not eminently original, this March is a scholarly work, well scored and effective, and the composer, who conducted, had a good deal of applause at the end. This being the last concert, the introduction of "God save the Queen" in the close of Weber's "Jubilee" overture was very appropriate. Mr. Hamilton conducted.——Mr. Henry Smart's Cantata of Jacob was performed in the Music Hall on the 9th ult., by the Sacred Harmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Geikie. The chorus numbered rather more than a hundred voices. The part of Rachel was very effectively sung by a lady well known to Edinburgh audiences. The choruses, especially "Happy art thou," and "Behold, thou shalt dwell," were admirably given.——Professor Oakeley gave an Organ Recital on the 11th ult. in the Music Class-room, to a very numerous audience. The first two numbers, "God is a Spirit" and "Blessed be the Lord God," from the Woman of Samaria, were selected with reference to the loss that music had sustained in the premature death of Sir W. S. Bennett. The remaining pieces were anticipations of the Reid Concert. By a skilul selection of stops, the fine orchestral effects of Professor Oakeley's Funeral March were reproduced with considerable success.——The Reid Festival began by a morning and an evening concert on Saturday, the 13th ult., the latter being the Reid Concert proper. The Music-Hall was, according to the usual practice, tastefully decorated with hothouse plants and evergreens sent from Methven Castle, and busts of distinguished musicians. Mr. Hallé's band is in some respects even better than ever. The number of performers is seventy in all, and there are few changes in the personnel of the band, the wind particularly; but one important and excellent alteration has been introduced, the double-bass players have all, as in Germany, the instrument with four strings, instead of the English three-stringed double bass. The additional low notes thus obtained give a very noticeable addition to the fullness, sonority, and mellowness of the general tone. The singers were Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Madame Norman-Neruda appeared as solo violinist at the evening concert. Out of respect to the memory of the great musician whose remains have just been consigned to Westminster Abbey, the concert commenced with the overture to the Naiades. In the interpretation of Beethoven's C minor Concerto, Mr. Hallé almost surpassed himself, and was worthily supported by his band. At the evening concert Madame Norman-Neruda made a great impression by her performance of Viotti's concerto in A minor. Miss Edith Wynne created much effect by her rendering of Professor Oakeley's song, "Tears, idle tears," the harp obbligato to which was finely played by Mr. Streather; Mr. Lloyd was the other vocalist. The attendance at both concerts was very large.

Falkirk, N.B.—Dr. Spark, assisted by Mr. Sykes, R.A.M., violinist, gave an interesting lecture-concert on Mozart and his Compositions, in the Corn Exchange, on Thursday evening the 28th January. The lecture, which was one of the course supplied under the auspices of the Falkirk School of Art, was largely attended. Besides several songs, &c., from Mozart's best known operas, Dr. Spark and Mr. Sykes played the Sonata No. 12, in E flat major, in a highly artistic manner. As a solo Dr. Spark played the well-known minuet and trio from the Symphony in E flat.

Halifax.—On the 2nd ult., a concert was given in the concert-room of the Dean Clough Institute, by the members of the Parish Church Choir, conducted by Mr. J. V. Roberts, Mus. Bac., Oxon, in aid of the erection of a new church dedicated to S. Augustine. The programme was of a high character and excellently rendered. Mr. Roberts played a Fantasia on Irish airs, and for an encore, Schumann's Arabesque in C. He also joined with one of his pupils in Mendelssohn's C minor Symphony, arranged by the author as a pianoforte duet. After all expenses had been paid, £31 was handed over to the building fund of the Church.

Harewood.—A concert was given in the Odd Fellows' Hall on the 12th ult., before a large audience. The artists were Miss Evison (soprano) from Hull, Miss Kennedy (contralto), Mr. A. W. Wharton (tenor), Mr. Dodds (bass), and Mr. Wharton (the blind solo pianist), Herr Carl Friedrich Feindt acting as conductor. The vocal music was rendered in a very efficient manner. Mr. Wharton was highly successful in his pianoforte solos. Herr Feindt accompanied the whole of the vocal music. The concert altogether was a great success.

Harrogate.—The Philharmonic Society gave a choral and orchestral concert in the Chalybeate Spa Room, on Monday the 8th ult. Besides a selection from Lurline and the "Wedding March" by the band, several glees and choruses were sung with orchestral accompaniments, including "Now by day's retiring lamp," "Blow, gentle gales," the Gipsy chorus in Preciosa, and "Now tramp," the solo of which was sung by Miss Place. Miss S. Duffield, the Misses Arnold and Priest, and Mr. Asquitte sang several songs, and Mr. Baxter contributed a violin solo on "Le prè aux clercs." Mr. J. A. Benson conducted.

Hull.—Messrs. Gough and Davy's concert on Tuesday night, the 16th ult., was an unqualified success. The reception given to Titiens, Trebelli-Bettini, and Risarelli was most enthusiatic. Signor Catalani and Signor Paladini, the former a light and pleasing baritone, and the latter an effective tenor, made up the vocal troupe. M. Colyns was the solo violinist, and Mr. F. H. Cowen conductor and accompanist. An excellent programme was provided. The duet, "Quis est homo," from Rossini's Stabat Mater, sung by Mdlle. Titiens and Madame Trebelli-Bettini, was a piece of perfect vocalisation. M. Colyns's two solos were Paganini's ever fresh "Carnival," and Beethoven's "Romance." Both were played well.——The Arion Orchestral Union continue to give most excellent selections from the Classics, every Saturday afternoon, and fully maintain the reputation they achieved last year.

Leamington.—Mr. Frank Spinney gave a most successful concert at the Royal Music Hall, on Saturday, the 20th ult. The artists were Madame Campobello-Sinico, Madame Stella Bonheur, Signor Uric, Signor Campobello, Mr. Frank Spinney, Mons. G. Niedzielski (the Polish violinist), and Signor Romano, conductor. Mr. Frank Spinney played the "Moonlight" Sonata, and "A te o cara," arranged by Fumigalli.

Melbourne (Australia).—The Philharmonic Society gave its twenty-second annual performance of the Messiah on Christmas night at the Town Hall, to one of the largest audiences ever brought together here. The full musical forces of the city united—the band of the Italian Opera, the Philharmonic band, the members of the Musical Association, and a grand chorus of 350 performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Pitts, Mrs. Cutter, Mr. Armes Beaumont, and Mr. Lamble. Mr. George Peake presided at the organ. Several of the numbers were encored, viz., "For unto us a child is born," "Lift up your heads," and the "Hallelujah." To show the appreciation of this really fine performance, the immense audience, above 4,000, remained seated till the last note of the "Amen" chorus. Mr. J. Summers conducted.

Melbourne (Derbyshire).—The Glee and Madrigal Society gave an excellent concert in the National School-room on Friday, the 29th January. Selections from the works of Handel and Mendelssohn were performed. The concert opened with the overture to Alexander's Feast, admirably played by the band. The chorus, "Be not afraid," was brilliantly rendered both by instruments and voices. "Lord God of Abraham" was finely sung by Mr. Field Baldwin. The trio "Lift thine eyes" was carefully given, and a refined rendering of the chorus "He, watching over Israel," brought the selections from Elijah to a close. The duet with chorus, "I waited for the Lord" (Hymn of Praise) was most tastefully and artistically given by Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Knipe. The overture to Samson, the two choruses, "Then round about the starry throne," and "Fixed in His everlasting seat;" "Honour and Arms," "Let the bright Seraphim," by Mrs. Wilson (trumpet obbligato, Mr. Townsend), and "Let their celestial concerts all unite," brought the concert to a close. During the three years that this Society has been in existence the following works have been performed: The Messiah, Judas Maccabæus, Samson, Solomon, Alexander's Feast, and Zadock the Priest, of Handel, Locke's music to Macbeth, and selections from the Elijah, &c., of Mendelssohn. The Society, which consists mainly of members of the working classes, numbers from forty to fifty. Mr. Wilson conducted, and Mr. Parkinson accompanied.

Montreal.—An organ Recital and concert was given in the St. James's Street Methodist Chapel, on the 15th January, by Mr. F. H. Torrington, in aid of the Methodist Chapel at St. Lamberts. The programme was an excellent one, consisting of selections from the works of Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Meyerbeer, Rossini, Bach, Mozart and others of the best composers of the past and present, all of which were rendered in a highly efficient manner. The concert was one of the most successful that has taken place in Montreal for some time past.

Newport (I. W.)—An organ recital was given at St. Thomas' Parish Church, on the 28th of January, by the organist, Mr. W. Scadding. There was a large attendance. The proceedings were commenced with a short prayer by the vicar (the Rev. George H. Connor, M.A., R.D.) The selection from Haydn, with which the programme commenced, was played with great power. The first anthem by the choir was a composition by George B. Allen, "In the beginning was the word," which was admirably rendered. The tenor solo, "Thou art fairer than the children of men," was sung by Mr. Lee. Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," was one of the gems of the evening, and Mendelssohn's "War march of the priests" closed a recital which bore evidence throughout of Mr. Scadding's perfect command over the instrument.

New York.—The excellent organ concerts recently given at the Church of the Holy Trinity (corner of Madison Avenue and 42nd Street) have been numerously attended and highly appreciated. The organists—Messrs. George W. Morgan, George W. Warren, and Samuel P. Warren—most successfully displayed the capabilities of the magnificent new instrument, built by Hilborne L. Roosevelt, on each occasion performing a selection of music the classical nature of which cannot be too highly praised.

Paisley.—On Friday evening, the 29th January, the Tonic Sol-fa Institute invited the public to the venerable Abbey, to hear a performance of Belshazzar. Mr. Pattinson presided at the new organ of the church, which was the only accompaniment. The principal singers were Madame Tonnelier, Mrs. Baxter, Mr. Whitehead, of Durham Cathedral, and Mr. Pope. The choruses, on the whole, were well sung. Mr. J. A. Brown was an efficient conductor.

Rainhill (Lancashire).—The third of the series of concerts for the benefit of the schools was given by the church choir on the 5th ult. in the School-room, in the presence of a large and appreciative audience. The programme, which was well selected, consisted of songs, duets, part-songs and glees. Mr. Rudge sang the "Stirrup cup," for which he was encored, a similar compliment being paid to Miss Kimpton. Mrs. Poore and Mr. Collins were very successful in Mendelssohn's duet, "I would that my love," and Mrs. Thomson and Messrs. Collins, Tyrer, Martin, Bell, Green, and W. S. Clarke acquitted themselves creditably in the parts allotted to them. Mr. C. Collins accompanied. ——On the 9th ult. a theatrical performance was given by the officers and servants, in the Recreation Hall of the County Asylum, for the amusement of the inmates. The Crimson Scarf, a comic opera in one act, by Legouix, and Bombastes Furioso, were produced in such a manner as to reflect great credit upon all who took part in them. The inmates paid great attention, and seemed to thoroughly appreciate and enjoy the whole of the performance.

Richmond.—A most successful concert, in aid of the Richmond Infirmary, was given at the Masonic Hall, Greyhound Hotel, on Thursday the 4th ult. Among the most striking numbers may be mentioned "Roberto, oh tu che adoro," and Braga's "Serenata," exquisitely sung by Miss Terry, accompanied on the flute by Mr. F. White; "Batti, batti," by Mrs. Wingrove; Balfe's "Rose song" from Il Talismano, given with admirable effect by Mr. E. A. Tietkins; the duet "Parigi o cara," Mrs. Wingrove and Mr. Tietkins; Terschak's flute solo "Allegro de concert," brilliantly played by Mr. F. White; and Rubinstein's Bourrée, rendered with much spirit by Rev. H. W. Miller, Mus. Bac. The orchestral pieces, Haydn's Symphony No. 1, and the overture to Masaniello, went well under the conductorship of Rev. W. Borrow. The glees, "Hie thee, shallop," and "The three chafers," also merit a word of praise.

Ripley.—A very successful concert was given in the public hall on the 8th ult., by the Derby Glee and Madrigal Society; Mr. W. J. Kempton, of Derby, conducted. The principal artists were Madame Billinie-Porter, Miss Armstrong, Mr. W. B. Ling, and Mr. Tom Kempton.

Romford.—An excellent concert, under the able conductorship of Mr. H. Regaldi, was given in the Corn Exchange, on the 4th ult. The first part of the programme was sacred, and consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," the soprano solo by Miss Emily Hope, and selections from Elijah. The choruses were well sung, reflecting the greatest credit on the conductor, as the Society is composed entirely of amateurs. In the second part, Mr. T. Sergeant contributed some violin solos, and the Messrs. A. H. and W. W. Brown, pianoforte duets. Some favourite part-songs were most efficiently rendered. Mr. Brown accompanied.

Scarborough.—The annual concert of the Vocal and Instrumental Society took place at the Prince of Wales Hotel, South Place, on Monday evening, the 8th ult., under the able conductorship of Dr. Sloman, organist of St. Martin's. The large assembly-room was, as on former occasions, completely filled with a brilliant company. The first part of the programme consisted of the Cantata, The Woman of Samaria, in which a mournful interest was felt by the audience in consequence of the very recent death of its distinguished composer—one of the very highest musicians of his country—Sir Wm. Sterndale Bennett. The second part of the programme was made up of secular music, the concerted portions of which were three part-songs by Macfarren. Dr. Sloman's song, "No tidings," was finely sung by Mrs. Smyth, and formed one of the gems of the evening, the accompaniment being enriched by an obbligato violoncello part, added by the composer, and most tastefully played by R. Menzies, Esq.——The sixth and last of the series of organ performances by Dr. Naylor, at All Saints' Church, was given on Friday evening, the 12th ult., on which occasion there was a numerous attendance. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's Sonata in D minor, the favourite Concerto in B flat, by Handel; Bach's Prelude and Fugue in F minor; the interesting Allegretto and March by the popular French organist, Guilmant, introduced by Dr. Naylor at his previous Recital, and an elegant specimen of Dr. Naylor's ability as an extemporist. Besides the instrumental pieces, the boys of the church choir sang three hymns in a very creditable manner.——As Dr. Sloman is about leaving Scarborough (having accepted the appointment of organist of St. Giles's Church, Reading), the members of the Scarborough Amateur Vocal and Instrumental Society, have organised a subscription to enable them to present to him a testimonial of the gratitude and esteem they entertain towards him, and of their appreciation of the assiduity, ability and courtesy with which he has acted as the honorary conductor of the Society for upwards of five years.

Stratford (Essex).—On Tuesday the 9th ult., the West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the second concert of the seventh season, in the Town Hall. The concert consisted of part-songs and ballads, with one or two instrumental pieces. The most effective choral numbers were the Choral March from Costa's Naaman, and Pinsuti's part-song, "The sea hath its pearls," the latter being sung without accompaniment, and receiving a well-merited encore. The soloists were the Misses Jones, Miss Cecilia Fuller, the Misses Radmall, Miss Fuller (piano), and Messrs. W. H. Wicker, A. Gowar, H. Compton, and C. Clutterbuck (concertina), all of whom contributed greatly to the success of the concert. Mr. J. S. Bates conducted, and Mr. F. C. Kitson was the accompanist, playing also in a duo for concertina and piano with Mr. Clutterbuck. A very appropriate close to the concert was the performance of Dr. Garrett's finale, song, and chorus, "Good night."

Swindon.—The third of the series of concerts given at the Mechanics' Institute during this session, under the management of Mr. Henry Webb, took place on the 10th ult. The band of the London Orchestral Union (conductor, Mr. E. Audibert), performed several selections admirably. The vocalists engaged were Miss Jessie Royd, Mdme. Alice Barnett, and Mr. Alfred Kenningham (of St. Paul's); accompanist, Mrs. Henry Webb. There were numerous encores. The hall was crowded in every part.

Terling, Essex.—A concert, under the patronage of Lord and Lady Rayleigh, was given on the 1st ult., with great success. The following artists contributed solos: Miss Jessie Stocken, Messrs. J. Smith, R. Gill, and J. B. Bolton. Miss Stocken sang "The maid of the mill," and Mr. Bolton obtained an encore for his capital rendering of a new song, "Polly," by Molloy. The Choral Society, under the direction of the Hon. Richard Strutt, sang several part-songs with effect.

Tottenham.—An excellent musical and literary entertainment was given in St. Paul's School on the 12th ult. The vocalists were the Misses M'Lellan and A. L. Fielding, and Messrs. F. C. Evans and L. Wells. Miss M'Lellan was encored in "Follow me gaily" (Pinsuti), a similar compliment being paid to Miss Fielding and Mr. L. Wells. Mr. F. C. Evans sang Hatton's popular songs, "The British Tar" and "Anthea," with marked effect. The literary portion of the programme was under the management of Messrs. J. Baucutt and W. Blount. The success of the entertainment was considerably enhanced by the pianoforte playing of Miss Dittmar, who also accompanied throughout.

Vale of Aylesbury.—On Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., the Sacred Harmonic Society gave a concert in the Corn Exchange, when Mozart's Twelfth Mass, with selections from Elijah, Creation, and Messiah were performed. The vocalists were Mrs. Parslow, Mrs. Taylor, Miss Clare, Miss Garner, Mr. Ingram, Mr. Wootton, and Mr. Fleet. The principal instrumentalists consisted of a string quartett from London, under the leadership of Mr. Knott, assisted by Mr. Ives, Mr. Robinson, Mr. R. A. Jones, Mr. A. L. Taylor, and Mr. S. G. Payne. Miss Steadman, and Mr. Biggin, organist of All Hallows, High Wycombe, presided at the pianoforte; and Mr. G. B. Smith at the harmonium.

Woodford.—The Musical Society, now numbering a hundred voices, under the direction of Mr. Walter Latter, R.A.M., organist of St. Mary's, Woodford, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, on Tuesday the 26th January. The choruses were very carefully rendered, and reflected great credit on the conductor. The solo vocalists were Miss Smellie (soprano), and Mr. Richard Latter (bass). The other parts were entrusted to amateurs. The band was led by Herr Wedermeyer in a highly satisfactory manner. The Lecture Hall was crowded.

Wolverhampton.—The second of the Festival Choral Society's concerts for the present season took place on the 1st ult. at the Exchange. The piece selected for performance was Handel's Oratorio, Judas Maccabæus, for which special arrangements had been made in the way of additions to the band and chorus. The soloists were Mdlle. Levier (soprano), Miss Granger, Miss M. J. Blower, Mr. H. T. Bywater, and Mr. Whitney. Mr. Mann presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Stockley conducted. Mdlle. Levier made a very favourable first impression. Her voice is rich and full, and she sings with ease and grace, her greatest achievement being in "From mighty kings." The band was highly efficient, and the choruses were very well sung.

THE PHILOSOPHY of VOICE (Reprinted from the Medical Press and Circular), showing the Right and Wrong Action of Voice in Speech and Song, by Charles Lunn. Price 1s. Bailliere, Tindall and Cox, King William-street, Strand, London; and all Booksellers.

"Mr. Lunn thoroughly understands the subject upon which he writes."—Oxford Chronicle.

"Should be in the hands of those to whom is committed the task of training the voices of future clergymen, public orators, and public or private singers."—Oxford Times.

"The work is admirably written, and well worthy of attention."—Cambridge Express.

"Very interesting to the medical profession, while every teacher of singing should carefully study it. . . . If Mr. Lunn be right, some of the most popular teachers are wrong, and his arguments are sufficiently weighty to call forth their careful consideration."—The Doctor.

"In support of his theory he brings forward a mass of evidence, both theoretical and medical, and a quantity of hard logic, quotes from innumerable authorities, either to shatter their opinions or to adopt them for himself, and generally argues out the entire question in a thoroughly exhaustive manner. Mr. Lunn is evidently, though a determined reformer, no fanatic, and no mere advertising adventurer. He thoroughly believes in the truth of all he writes, and decidedly has his subject at his fingers' ends. Neither is the work a mere copy of former productions; but, on the contrary, it shows an originality of thought and a novelty of ideas which entitle it, at least, to thoughtful consideration. To all who are interested in the subject, the 'Philosophy of the Voice' may be confidently recommended, and, whether the various deductions are found true or not, the shilling brochure is eminently readable, and decidedly interesting. It is idle to attempt to suppress a novel theory because it is new, or to treat it with contempt because it is by existing authorities held to be unsound. When a man argues by sheer force of logic and authority he makes out a primâ facie case, and is entitled to be heard."—Figaro.

"Among 'thorough' musical reformers of the present day, few are better entitled to a hearing than Mr. Charles Lunn; and it is with some feeling of pride that we look back on the many papers by him, which have appeared in our columns—all conspicuous for conscientious heartiness, and an uncompromising advocacy of what the writer considers the truth. In attacking a system, it is almost impossible to avoid offending individuals; and the home thrusts of Mr. Lunn occasionally procured for him both ill-will and misrepresentation. . . . The matter is well reasoned out; and though we cannot expect singing masters to endorse all that is said, they may perhaps consider it advisable to learn as much as they can concerning that most delicate instrument, the Human Voice, which they have been in the habit of treating in so off-hand a manner."—The Orchestra.

"Though small in size, the work is very important to members of the profession that makes its living by the human voice divine. . . . We have no doubt that health and art would be both benefited by the adoption of the principles expounded. The author—who has clearly and logically enunciated his theory—deserves success."—Pictorial World.

NOW READY.

Second Edition, Revised. Imperial 32mo., cloth, price 9d.

THE

POINTED FOR CHANTING

BY

The Rev. S. FLOOD JONES, The Rev. J. TROUTBECK, Dr. STAINER, JAMES TURLE, and J. BARNBY.

PUBLISHED WITH THE SANCTION OF

AND

THE VERY REV. THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., in acknowledging the remarkable favour with which the first issue of this Psalter has been received, beg to announce that they have published an entirely new Edition, in two sizes, with more distinct accents and other signs, the type for which has been cast specially for this work.

Also in compliance with the desire of the Editors, they have adopted an asterisk as a breath mark. The comma will in future only indicate a slight pause without taking breath. This improvement will, they confidently believe, render their Psalter the most valuable means of ensuring good chanting. The difficulty that has hitherto been found in determining where the breath should be taken is well known to Clergy, Choirmasters, and Organists, and the advantage of having this settled on an intelligible basis cannot fail to be appreciated.

A reference to the subjoined examples will more clearly show the advantages of this system:—

I will love thee O Lord my strength * the Lord is my stony rŏck, and | my de- | fence : my Saviour, my God, and my might, in whom I will trust * my buckler, the horn also of mў sal- | -vation | and my | refuge.

For lo, thine enemies O Lord * lo, thine ĕne- | -mies shall | perish : and all the workers of wĭcked- | -ness shall | be de- | stroyed.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. have only to add that any inconvenience attendant upon making changes in a book which has already been largely adopted will, they feel confident, be more than counterbalanced by the valuable improvements incorporated in the new Editions.

Edition I., Imperial 32mo., cloth	0	9
„ II., ditto, with Proper Psalms, cloth	1	0
„ III., Demy octavo, large type, with Proper Psalms, cloth....	2	6

All Editions contain the Canticles, and Special Hymns for use on certain days instead of the Venite.

The Clergy can be supplied with copies, in quantities of not less than 25, on liberal terms.

 A Selection of Chants (Single and Double), which may be used with or without the Cathedral Psalter, is in preparation.

The Festal and Ferial Responses will shortly be issued by the same Editors.

This Edition has been prepared with considerable pains, all the ancient uses having been carefully examined and collated.

The People's Plain Song will be clearly indicated in a line by itself.

The Offices of the Holy Communion, Baptism, Holy Matrimony, the Burial of the Dead, &c., will be included, thus forming with the Cathedral Psalter a complete Noted Prayer Book.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners-street, and 35, Poultry.

"Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and ability. * * * * There is no stond or impediment in the wit, but may be wought out by fit studies."—Lord Bacon.

CONCORDIA:

A Journal of Music and the Sister Arts.

TO BE PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, PRICE 3D.

ON May 1*st*, will be issued the first number of Concordia, a Journal chiefly devoted to the interests of Music.

Concordia is not projected upon any assumption that existing Musical Journals have failed to properly discharge their mission. But, while the good service those Journals are doing receives hearty acknowledgment, it is believed that, owing to the rapid spread of musical taste, room exists for another labourer in the same cause. Concordia will enter the field, therefore, not in opposition to its contemporaries, but as a fellow-worker with them.

While holding definite opinions, Concordia will strive to make itself the organ of an enlightened eclecticism. Regarding every question without prejudice, and solely in the interest of Art, it will encourage in its contributors and correspondents that free expression of ideas which ultimately establishes truth. Above all, it will be actuated by a desire to recognise and promote whatever is good in the new developments which are inseparable from the progressive nature of Music.

A leading feature of Concordia will be the number and importance of its original Articles and Essays. Arrangements are in progress to obtain the co-operation of writers eminent in their respective departments, and it is believed that, from a literary point of view, Music will have, in the new Journal, a worthy representative. Among the gentlemen who have already signified their willingness to contribute to Concordia, are:—

J. BARNBY.	JOHN HULLAH.
JOSEPH BENNETT.	H. C. LUNN.
W. CHAPPELL, F.S.A.	G. A. MACFARREN, Prof. Mus., Cantab.
W. H. CUMMINGS.	WALTER MACFARREN.
E. DANNREUTHER.	EBENEZER PROUT, B.A.
H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.	DR. STAINER, M.A.
REV. H. R. HAWEIS, M.A.	T. L. STILLIE.
HENRY HOWE.	DR. W. H. STONE.

From week to week, as may appear desirable, notices of subjects connected with the sister Arts of Poetry, and Painting, the Drama, &c., will be contributed to Concordia by able writers.

As a medium of news, Concordia will be singularly complete. Correspondents in all the chief towns of the United Kingdom, and in the principal Cities of the Continent and America, will keep its readers well informed as to the progress of Music at home and abroad.

Special attention will be paid to that criticism of Art and its exponents which is the greatest responsibility, as it is the greatest privilege, of Journalism. On all matters involving such criticism, Concordia will speak with a single desire that the truth may be known; strong in a conviction that the temperate utterance of honest opinions must surely win respect.

The department of Reviews will receive the careful attention called for by its importance. The best available talent has been secured, and, whenever necessary, the letter-press will be accompanied by illustrations in Music type. Prominence will be given, in this department, to the leading works published abroad.

Among other valuable features of Concordia will be, subject to the co-operation of the various publishers, a weekly list of new Music. Arrangements are also in progress with a view to give, week by week, particulars of the Services, Anthems, &c., to be sung in the Cathedrals and chief Parish Churches of the United Kingdom, on the Sunday following each issue.

It is believed that, in Concordia, the musical public will have a thoroughly readable Journal—one, that is to say, which interests the Amateur not less than the cultivated Musician. No pains will be spared in order to secure this desirable result.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS.

A scale of charges for Advertisements in Concordia may be had on application to the Publishers.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depôt for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. Flavell's, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer—Charles Russell.

Or, Straight Pedal Board, with Action, £3 15s.

As will be seen from the following letter, these pedals can be easily attached by an amateur workman in a short time.

March 11, 1875.

VERDI'S REQUIEM MASS.

By Joseph Bennett.

Any work from the pen of the master who wrote Rigoletto and Aïda deserves respectful notice, but there is a particular reason why, at the present moment, Signor Verdi's contribution to the music of the Church should be brought under the public eye. In May next the illustrious Italian master is expected to visit England, accompanied by the artists whose names are identified with his latest composition, for the purpose of directing a series of performances of the Mass in the Royal Albert Hall. With an event so interesting in prospect, and if only for the sake of a man so eminent, Verdi's artistic tribute to the memory of Alessandro Manzoni cannot fail to be an object of much curious enquiry. It is with a view to meet this in some measure that the following analysis is submitted. A work so elaborate in character and of such dimensions can, at best, only be treated superficially in the present form, but copious examples may serve to suggest far more than it is possible to state, and thus serve a useful purpose. It need only be further premised that a description, and not a criticism, is intended.

With regard to the opening number of the Mass, it must first of all be pointed out that the distinctive petition for "eternal rest" and "perpetual light" receives no special emphasis. Verdi is satisfied to treat it briefly, and as a short preface to an expanded "Kyrie." He does this by means of two well contrasted movements, the second of which, on the words, "Te decet hymnus in Sion," &c., is followed by a repetition of the first. Neither will give much trouble in analysis. At the outset (Andante—A minor) the instrumental basses enunciate alone the subjoined short phrases :—

—and here let it be said that throughout this initial portion of the work, Verdi betrays the bent of his present musical mind by keeping the voices subordinate to the orchestra. The phrases just quoted, for example, are repeated in harmony by the instruments, while the choir, sotto voce, interjects at intervals, tonic and dominant chords. The continuation shows a like feature. First, we have an orchestral sequence, accompanied only by a soprano semi-chorus :—

No. 2. con espressione.

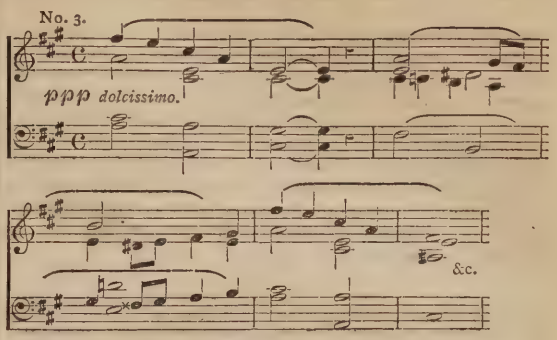
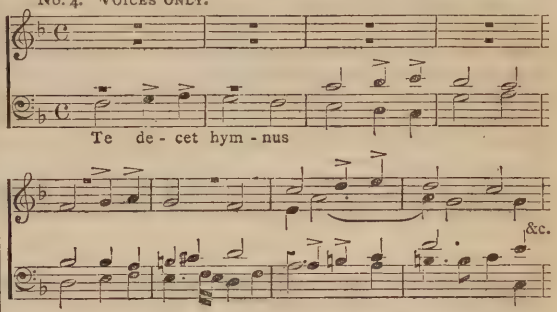
—and next, the key changing to A major, a more melodious episode :—

No. 3.



—throughout which the voice-parts, together or separately, are heard in short ejaculations. The episode just cited ends the first portion of the movement, its interrupted cadence leading to the second (Poco più—F major)—written, for four solo voices only, is, perhaps, as complete an imitation of the severe ecclesiastical style as Verdi could be expected to make. A few bars will show its character at a glance :—

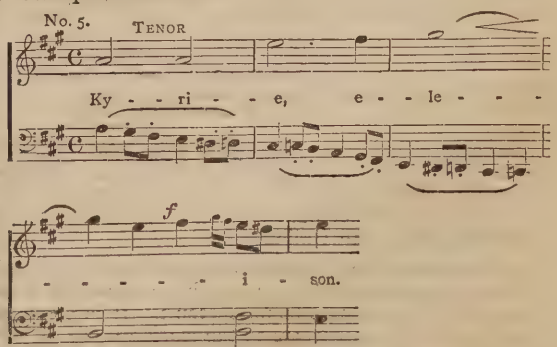
No. 4. Voices only.



With this an ornate and Spohresque cadence is not in perfect keeping, but few will care to condemn, therefore, one of the best examples of sacred music presented by the work. The first section of the movement is now repeated, its cadence, not again interrupted, leading directly to the "Kyrie" (Animando un poco—A major).

Verdi seems to have taken great pains with his "Kyrie" and assuredly contrived to infuse into it much that is peculiar to himself. The solo voices enter successively with a broad phrase that might belong to any recognized Church composer, but the hand of the famous Italian is visible at once in the accompaniment :—

No. 5. Tenor



This passage having been repeated, in the dominant, by the bass, and in F minor by the soprano, is varied by the mezzo-soprano as a "lead" to a very brief ensemble (chorus and soli), which ends the exordium of the movement in E major. Addressing himself to the task of eight-part writing now before him, the composer draws largely upon contrapuntal resources, without, as the orchestra testifies, wholly abandoning the free style. Giving a portion of the theme (No. 5) as a subject to the chorus, he makes it fly through all the parts, attended by a counterpoint for the soli; the violins accompanying with groups of semi-quavers. A short quotation will supply the key to much that follows:—

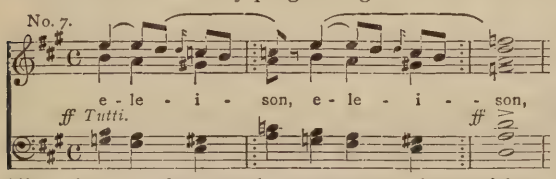
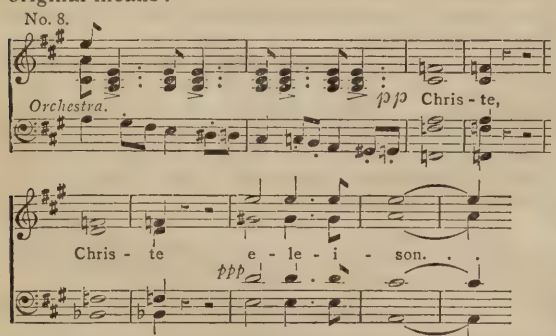
At this point, Verdi settles comfortably upon a pedal,—dominant of F sharp major—in which key he soon closes the second section of the movement. Passing on, the subject is heard, in augmented notes, from the soli, still with its counterpoint, but now attended, also, by the chromatic scale passage for orchestra so conspicuous in the opening bars (No. 5). The composer, however, quickly slips his contrapuntal fetters. No sooner has the theme appeared in all the parts, than we find him easily progressing thus:—



The theme subsequently reappears, but without variety of treatment, and in brief time a decorative cadence leads to the Coda. Here Verdi is himself, that is to say, striking and impressive by original means:—



Three bars from the orchestra bring the "Kyrie" to an end, and put the finishing touch to an impression that the Mass opens with a curious, though far from ineffective, compromise between what is old and what is new in Italian sacred music.

The master now addresses himself to the tremendous Hymn on which so many have expended their best efforts without adequate result. It is clear, at the outset, that he brings to the work a sense of perfect freedom in the choice of means, and that he will avail himself of all the descriptive resources characteristic of modern art. How boldly, for example, he treats the exclamation, "Dies iræ! dies illa!" with which the Hymn begins; striving to picture the awe and fear attendant upon "that day dismaying." After reiterating the tonic chord through two bars and a half with the full force of the orchestra, the voices enter thus (Allegro agitato—G minor)—a tonic pedal being sustained throughout:—

No. 9. Allegro agitato.

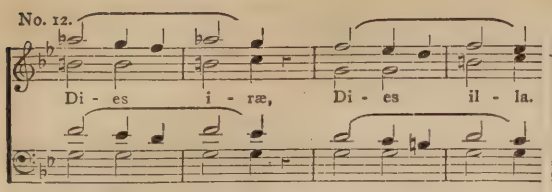
No. 12.



—the poignant minor ninth making itself felt as well as heard. As the sequence descends the force of tone is abated, till the voices (sempre pppp) die away on a tonic chord. But this is not the end. The orchestra, as softly as possible, though agitated, continues the sequence; while, at intervals and part after part, the chorus breathes the words "Dies iræ! dies illa!" in monotone. Thus the composer's object is gained, and, after his own dramatic fashion, he conveys the precise feeling desired. But, passing on to the second verse, we hear more of the sequence, the orchestra continuing it in this form:—

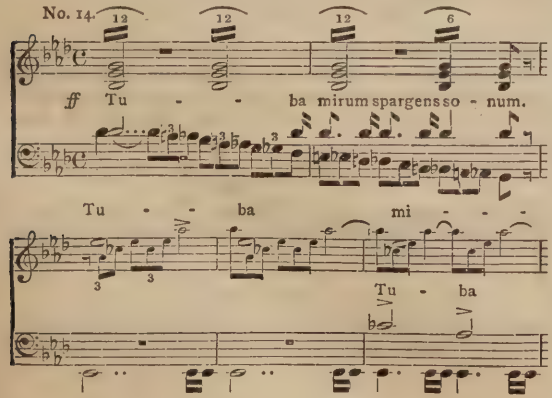
No. 13.

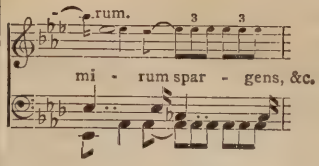
—as the chorus, sotto voce, and still in monotone, ejaculates "Quan—tus—tremor—est—futurus," &c. On these words Verdi does not dwell long, and with them the first section of the hymn closes on the chord of C minor. The next verse, "Tuba mirum spargens sonum," &c., or, as a favourite English version renders it:—

"Then shall ring the trump's weird knelling,
Through each tomb and charnel dwelling,
All before the Throne compelling"

—has ever been the despair of composers, who, compelled, as they fancy, to be imitative, are, for the most part, puerile or ridiculous. Boldly grappling with the difficulty, and determined that nothing shall be lost through default of attempting all, Verdi gives us, not one trumpet, but many. The strident instruments are heard from far and near, each answering to each, like those in the Daybreak scene of Lohengrin, till "the air is full of noises." How far this suggests the signal for the "Dies iræ," and how far it reminds one of the opening of some state pageant, individual tastes must decide. Here the object is simply description and not criticism. After no fewer than 26 bars of fanfare (Allegro sostenuto—A flat), the bass chorus enters boldly on a 6—4—2 chord. The effect not of this "lead" only, but of the entire movement, may be judged from the quotation following:—

No. 14.





—and it is necessary to say no more than that the trumpets, both on the orchestra and behind it, continue their fanfare till the movement ends with an abrupt transition from E flat minor through C sharp minor to A major. Whatever may be thought of the dramatic propriety of the "Tuba mirum," few will deny that in the next section, "Mors stupebit," &c., Verdi exhibits his most characteristically impressive manner. The orchestra begins (Molto meno mosso—(D minor) with a phrase:—

No. 15.

—repeated, at the interval of one bar, before the solo voice (bass) enters, and afterwards continuing as the only accompaniment This solo is a brief one, but its ending may claim to rank among the most striking attempts at sound painting. Thus it runs:—

No. 16.

In the first edition of the work the master now, by way of contrast, set the verse "Liber scriptus proferetur," &c., as a strict fugue in four parts (Allegro assai mosso—G minor) having the following subject:—

No. 17. con espress. stacc.

No observation is called for by the working of this theme till we find it inverted:—

No. 18.

—just previous to a stretto:—

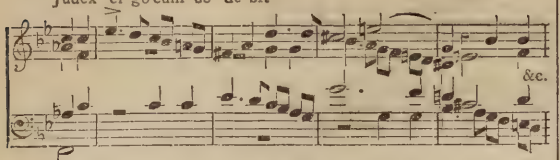
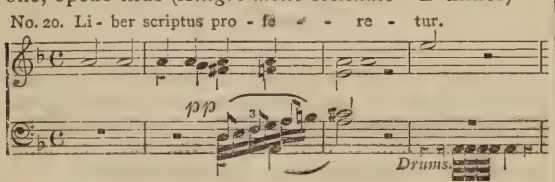
No. 19.
Judex er-go cum se de-bit



The rest of the fugue, written with fluency and vigour, may be left to speak for itself. Ending abruptly on the dominant of D, it is followed by a repetition of the extended sequence quoted above, with which the entire movement finishes. The resolution of the dominant seventh chord at the close is, however, delayed by a "pause," and takes place in the first bar of the next number—a trio (Adagio—G minor) for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and tenor.

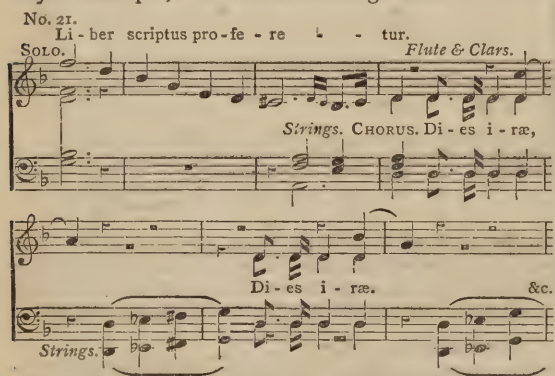
Such was the original form of the "Liber scriptus," but for some reason or other, possibly because strictly contrapuntal music seemed out of place in the midst of so much that is purely descriptive and emotional, Verdi substituted a mezzo-soprano solo, with chorus, wherein he adopts the free, suggestive style of the preceding movements. The solo, a very declamatory one, opens thus (Allegro molto sostenuto—D minor)—

No. 20. Li - ber scriptus pro - fe - re - tur.



Continuing in the fashion here indicated till a full close is reached, when the chorus monotones the words "Dies iræ" as softly as possible. This ejaculatory use of the chorus meets with great favour from the composer, and is frequently adopted throughout the solo, from which it is only necessary to quote, by way of example, a few of the closing bars:—

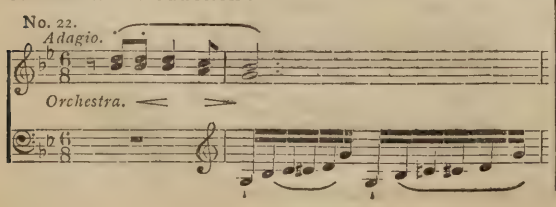
No. 21.
Li - ber scriptus pro - fe - re - tur.



The passage beginning thus leads directly, in common with the discarded fugue, to a repetition of the sequence, and so on to the Trio, "Quid sum miser," already mentioned.

Distinctive features of this Trio appear in the brief orchestral introduction:—

No. 22.
Adagio.



—after which the mezzo-soprano announces the theme in two phrases, divided by the passage just given. It will be enough to cite the theme alone; premising that the figure of accompaniment in semi-quavers is sustained throughout:—

No. 23. espress.

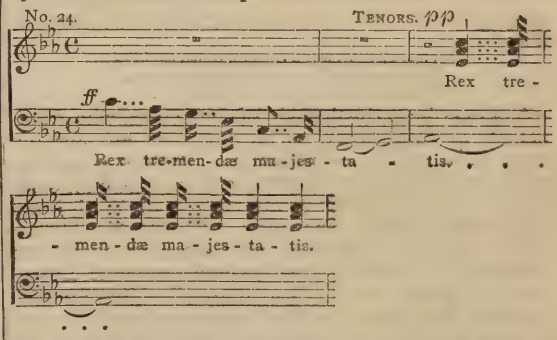
At this point the tenor voice takes up the melody, which, however, passes to the soprano after the first phrase, and, thenceforward, we have three-part harmony of a kind that needs no comment, however much we may be disposed to enlarge upon the beauty of the music, and its strong sympathy with the sense of the text. At the close of the trio, our composer comes face to face with one of the most expressive verses of the hymn:—

"Rex tremendæ majestatis
Qui salvándos salvas gratis
Salva me, fons pietatis"

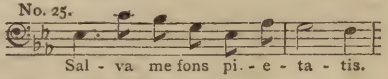
—and it is at once clear that he has girded up his loins for a great effort. Beginning Adagio maestoso (C minor), the bass chorus leads off, imposingly answered by the tenors in three parts:—

No. 24.



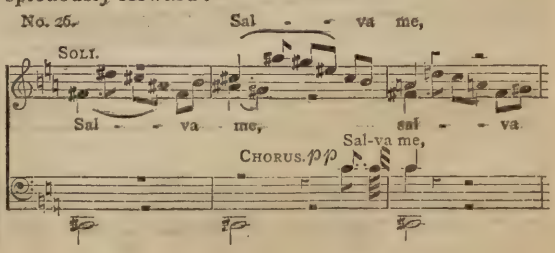
This being repeated, the prayer of the verse is taken up in succession by the mezzo-soprano, tenor, and bass soloists, the phrase used in each case being as subjoined:—

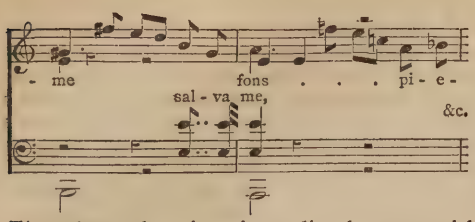
No. 25.



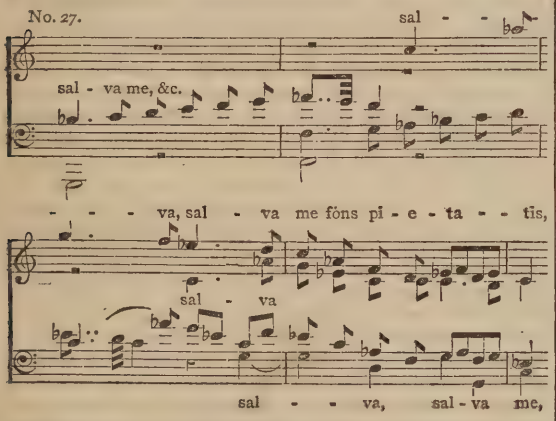
Again and again the bass chorus enters with its distinctive passage, replied to by the solo soprano, till an enharmonic change to F sharp major brings both the solo soprani, with the phrase last quoted, conspicuously forward:—

No. 26.

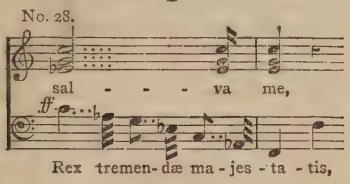




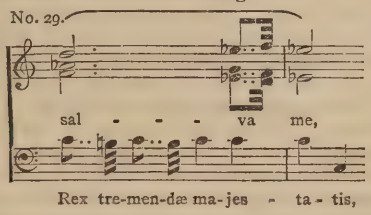
The other solo voices immediately enter with a new phrase, and the ensemble passage is one of the best in the number:—



At this point begins a sequence of remarkable power, leading to a splendid climax. It is in structure antiphonal, the chorus leading thus:—

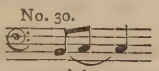


—and the solo voices answering:—



As the sequence rises the expression of the music becomes more acute and intense till, at last, all join in a massive C major cadence, which, with a brief Coda, ends what must be regarded as one of Verdi's most powerful displays of strong feeling.

The closing bars of the "Rex tremendæ" contain an orchestral figure:—

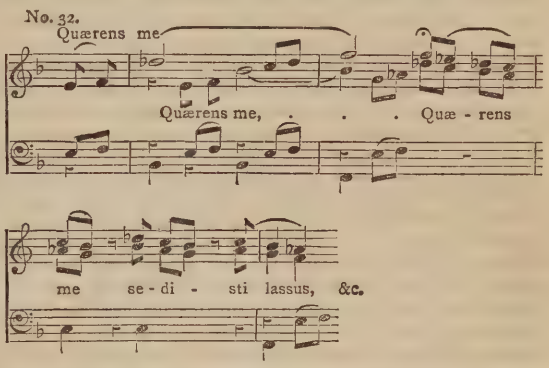


—which is carried on without pause into the next number, and, with a slight modification, plays a very important part. The number in question, "Recordare Jesu pie," is one of the most characteristic, as it is likely to be one of the most popular, in the work. This was, of course, anticipated. So great a master of pathetic expression as Verdi was not likely to fail when dealing with words of which the following convey the sense:—

"Think, kind Jesus, my salvation
Caused Thy wondrous Incarnation;
Leave me not to reprobation."

The "Recordare" is set as a duet for two sopranos (Adagio—F major), and its leading theme is announced by the second voice, to the accompaniment of bass strings and wood wind:—

After a brief solo for the first voice and an ensemble ending with a full close, a second section begins thus:—



—and leads to a return of the first theme, now accompanied by strings, trem. The Coda, heralded by a cadenza, is somewhat remarkable in character, and deserves quotation:—

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

By Henry C. Lunn.

Handel once expressed a hope that his music would "not merely entertain his hearers, but make them better." That this desire has been thoroughly fulfilled will be amply attested by all who know how largely sacred compositions have aided charity, and how immeasurably the works of this great master have exceeded all others in drawing multitudes to listen to scriptural texts deepened by that language which, from its universality, has ever been considered the most appropriate for devotion. No sermon appealing to the sympathies of a congregation for the claims of the needy and afflicted, delivered by the most eloquent preacher, has effected results so beneficial to the intended object as the performance of the "Messiah," which, glorifying the mission of charity and good will to all men, pleads its own cause by the simple grandeur of the music to which it is allied, even to those who might remain unmoved by a studied discourse from the pulpit. All engaged in organising Festivals for the benefit of Charities have for years admitted this truth; and the lapse of time, instead of diminishing, rather increases the attraction of the work. More modern music may be dwelt upon with pleasure; and the rendering of works which have now become classics may not only prove triumphantly successful, but be the means of crowding a building with lovers of sacred art; but the "Messiah morning" is the one looked to for the cause of the Charity; and many indeed are the widows and orphans who have had reason to bless the name of an advocate who wrote, not for an age, but for all time. That music has a powerful influence upon all who listen to it is then an admitted fact, but how much more must it have upon those who are constantly engaged in its interpretation? The works of Handel, Bach, Mendelssohn and many others who have enriched the stores of sacred music are, both with vocalists and instrumentalists, their earnest study; and beauties which may escape a casual hearer are to them thoroughly familiar. If, then, charity be warmed into life by the mighty power of music, it is not to be wondered at that those in the daily exercise of the art should be foremost in every undertaking having for its object the softening of the misery which, from age, disease, or accident, often befalls their professional brothers and sisters; and if I now direct attention to the Royal Society of Musicians, it is not in consequence of a belief that the relief given by this Association is not as effectually and as generously administered in other musical Charities, but because I am more intimately acquainted with its workings, and know that some misunderstanding exists with the general public as to the manner in which its funds are applied.

Referring to a distressing instance of misfortune which may have happened to any well-known musical artist, I have often read in contemporary journals a paragraph calling upon the Royal Society of Musicians to step in at once to his relief, and even rating it in no measured terms for allowing such a case to pass unnoticed. Now an Institution which could contribute to so deserving a cause might indeed earn the thanks of many; but it should be fully understood by those who bring these charges of neglect against the Royal Society of Musicians—not that it will not, but that it cannot so dispose of its funds. The Charter, granted by George the Third in 1790, expressly says that the money arising from the fund, is for "the support and relief of decayed Musicians, being Members of the said Society, and their families." Every facility is offered to musical professors for becoming members; but should they fail to do so, it will be seen, by the above quotation from the Charter, that they have no more cause to blame the Royal Society for not assisting them in their trouble than has a traveller who meets with an accident on the railway to blame the Railway Insurance Company for not granting him compensation, although he has neglected to take an insurance ticket.

But notwithstanding that occasional reflections are publicly cast upon this Institution for what it does not do, very little is generally heard of what it does do. The quiet unostentatious manner in which the funds of this Charity are dispensed at every monthly meeting in Lisle-street is known only to those members of the profession who freely give their time to the business, and to those numerous recipients of its bounty who, but for its helping hand, would be cast destitute upon the world in their declining years. It may astonish many, perhaps, to hear that the Society now supports forty-two widows, besides many married and single members who are incapacitated from following their profession; that in addition to this, it grants sums for the schooling of children, for apprentice premiums, for temporary medical aid, and on the decease of a member, for funeral expenses. The annual subscription is small, and no distinction is made in awarding relief as to the length of time a person has belonged to the Society, any one duly elected, upon payment of the entrance premium and first subscription, being entitled to all the privileges of the oldest member. A case which recently occurred, although by no means an exceptional one, will furnish an illustration of the promptitude with which relief is afforded to claimants. A young and excellent artist, well known and universally esteemed in his profession, became in delicate health, and was recommended by the doctor to try the effect of a sea voyage. At great pecuniary loss, he acted upon this advice, and on his return from his journey was well enough to resume his duties. A relapse, however, shortly took place, and he was informed by an eminent medical authority that he could not live if he remained in England, but that if he went to the Cape he might rally. As a last resource, he severed all the ties which bound him, professionally and socially, to his native country, and embarked for what he hoped might prove a friendly home in a strange land. This home, however, he was destined never to reach, for he died at sea, leaving a widow and six children utterly unprovided for, and amongst total strangers. No sooner were these circumstances brought before the Society than a sum was granted for the inevitable expenses attendant upon the return of the family to England, and with an unanimity of feeling which evidenced how deep and universal was the sympathy with the bereaved relatives of a respected member, an annuity of one hundred and twenty pounds was voted, still reserving the power of granting apprentice premiums to the children in after years.

With these facts before us, it must be evident that the Society could not continue its career of usefulness were it not mainly supported by subscriptions, donations and legacies from the public: indeed it may be stated that the yearly payments of the members do not cover more than one eighth of the annual expenditure. But, in tendering the warm thanks of the body of members for the pecuniary aid afforded by well-wishers of the Charity—which I cannot but think would be increased were its real mission better understood—not only the valuable time freely given to the management of its affairs by the members, but the important services rendered by its honorary officers must not be forgotten. It would be invidious to mention names; but special cases occur to me whilst writing these lines where suffering has been promptly relieved, advice given, and tender care provided to members by men whose standing in their profession would render such assistance inaccessible, were it not accorded without reward of any kind save the consciousness of having helped those who were powerless to help themselves. Let us then hope that much of the true Christian spirit which actuates all connected with this excellent Charity may be traced to the power of the art to which its members are devoted. If music lifts man from earth, it lifts them nearer to Heaven; and Handel rightly prophesied when he expressed his conviction that his music would not only entertain his hearers, but "make them better."

Mr. Gye's prospectus for the present season of the Royal Italian Opera promises two works which must command attention—the first, Wagner's "Lohengrin," and the second, Gounod's "Romeo e Giulietta." The last named Opera will be welcomed after a seven years' slumber, more especially as correct judgment upon its merits could scarcely be formed with so imperfect a representative of the principal part as Signor Mario, who on its first performance had but small knowledge of the music allotted to him. The principal members of the company are the same as last season; but amongst the débutantes the name of Madlle. Thalberg is announced, her "first appearance on any stage." The season commenced on the 30th ult. with Rossini's Opera, "Guglielmo Tell."

Mr. Mapleson, having secured a site on the Victoria Embankment for his Grand National Opera House, which is now in the course of erection, announces his last season at Drury Lane Theatre. "Lohengrin" and Cherubini's "Medea" are in the prospectus; and if they are really produced, we trust that their success will render the constant presentation of such works as "Il Talismano" and "Mignon" unnecessary; although those thirsting for new compositions will perhaps be pleased to find that an Original Opera in Four Acts, "Gli amanti di Verona," the music by the Marquis d'Ivry, is promised. In addition to the usual company, several new appearances are mentioned; and we are glad to find that Sir Michael Costa retains his post as Conductor. The season is announced to commence on the 10th inst.

BACH IN SOHO.

(From the Guardian, March 17.)

Considering how English in temperament was the great Bach, it is strange that English church musicians have been so long in learning to appreciate him. For generations he has been looked upon as "dry," which his vocal music certainly is not, unless the embodiment of deep feeling in every phrase be consistent with the epithet; and held up as a wonder of contrapuntal complication, when it would be nearer the truth to describe him as a master of perfectly intelligible and enjoyable elaboration. Bach was not only very English, but he was very like an English organist. His fingers clung to the keyboard while impatient preachers chafed to begin their sermons; he had his differences with church officials, and disguised the chorale with extemporary variations, so as to "put out" the congregation. On the other hand, again like church musicians nearer home and nearer our own time, when he found a sphere in which he could indulge his musical predilections, he threw himself heartily into the work, and had no difficulty in co-operating with congenial minds among the clergy. It was in his position as organist and director of music at St. Thomas's, Leipsic, that this side of his character came out, and that he not only produced his immortal settings of the "Passion," but composed nearly 400 cantatas, or extended anthems, one for every Sunday and other festival for five successive years. In a recently published biography of the composer * we read:—

"Previous to this the motets and cantatas were chosen without any regard to their colouring and connection with the other portion of the service; but Bach made it his business to acquaint himself with the preachers' texts, and the whole bearing of the day's service, choosing the theme for his cantata accordingly. The most general form of these cantatas was—first, a grand orchestral introduction, after which followed a fine and impressive chorus, succeeded by recitatives, airs, or duets, the whole concluding with a choral, in which all joined. The orchestral accompaniments are remarkably fine, and quite independent of the voice. Besides the organ, strings, flutes, hautboys, and trumpets are employed."

It is one of these cantatas or anthems which is now being rendered—perhaps in the manner Bach himself had them rendered in St. Thomas's, Leipsic; certainly in a manner he would have liked to hear them rendered—on Sunday evenings during Lent at St. Anne's Church, Soho. We have had in former years to describe orchestral services at this church: they have been of a more ambitious character hitherto; but certainly not more satisfactory. The work chosen this Lent is the cantata Gottes Zeit ist die Allerbeste Zeit, Englished by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, of Westminster Abbey, and published at Novello's as "God's time is the best." As regards the sentiment of the words, this little work appears to have been intended as a New Year's Day, or Advent, lesson on the uncertainty of life: there is nothing specially Lenten in its character; though the absence of any highly wrought passages, and a general quiet and religious sadness, fall in well with the present Church season. In construction the cantata or anthem answers pretty closely to the description we have quoted above of the round of works which constituted the great German church organist's musical "Christian Year." A "sonatina" of twenty bars, molto adagio, prefigures the tender solemnity which pervades the subsequent choral writing: the principal subject is here assigned to the flute, an instrument which Bach used largely, and in more sustained obbligato fashion than is now the custom. In St. Anne's, a building where music is heard to perfection, the effect of this prelude was all that could be imagined as desirable for the expression of its spirit: we never before felt that flutes could be so entirely ecclesiastical.

Mr. Barnby has a full and well-drilled choir; and they took the little, lucid, firm-built, first chorus, "God's own time is the best," with an air of quiet command over its rendering, which, while it satisfied the musician, had the devotional advantage of preventing any thought of anxiety in the listener as to the possibility of failure: the singers, in fact, might have been forgotten in the quiet ease of the execution. A tenor solo, "O Lord, incline us to consider that our days are numbered," was sung in that true ecclesiastical style which draws no attention to the performer, by Mr. Charles Wade; to hear whom must go far to disarm those who think that all solo singing in church is "display." A fine feature of this cantata is the next movement, for all the bass voices, "Set in order thine house, for thou shalt die," accompanied, in piquant contrast, by the flute, with quasi arpeggio passages, staccato; and an under movement of the strings, also staccato. The next little section of the work is an example of Bach's skill in the beautiful device of floating a treble solo upon a rocking sea of counterpoint in the lower voice parts: over these latter, singing the words,

* The Great Tone Poets. By F. Crowest. (London: R. Bentley and Son.)

"It is the old decree: Man, thou art mortal," enters presently the voice of a treble chorister, in one of the master's most piously tender strains, "Yea come, Lord Jesus, come," the whole forming a gem of religious musical pathos. The same perfectly undemonstrative, but by no means unfeeling, style here characterized the rendering under Mr. Barnby's direction.

Not the least grateful of the several effects in the anthem is the occasional entry of the organ alone, after the orchestral instruments have had possession of the ear. This occurs—to mention one of several places—at the solo, which in turn the alto voice takes, "Into Thy hands my spirit I commend." This beautiful number is most expressively sung by a lady. In the next movement, a bass solo, "Thou shalt be with me to-day in Paradise," the alto section of the choir enters, after a while, with snatches of a choral, overlying, in sustained minims and semibreves, the more rapid passages of the bass, and, in the end, taking exclusive possession of the field, the solo ceasing. No doubt Bach intended, in starting this choral, to give a cue—the expression must be pardoned as the only one available—to the congregation; and it may well be imagined what a grand effect might arise if the congregation could only take the cue, and, gradually gathering their voices together, assume the rôle designed for them. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that no one of the congregation at St. Anne's takes up the part.

A doxological chorus of vigour and dignity concludes the cantata, the performance of which throughout was as near perfection as could be well imagined. No church, and no choir, perhaps, could be better fitted for a revival of the historical scenes of musical worship for which the work was originally written. As one has often wished, at a Handel festival, that Handel could live again to hear his massive choruses rendered by hosts of choristers such as he must have dreamed of when he scored them, so one could but foolishly long for the impossible possibility of the dear old Leipsic organist—who was so much more than an organist—being a hearer of one of his own church cantatas, performed in quiet perfection, as this is, with flutes and viols, and by white-robed choristers, as an edifying adjunct to worship.

The choir numbers sixty-one voices; the instruments employed are two flutes, two first violins, two second violins, two violas, two violoncellos, two double basses, and the organ. Mr. J. Coward, jun. is organist, and employs his instrument with rare and commendable abstinence. The Church last Sunday was crowded to such an extent that standing room was hardly to be found. J. C.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Mr. Alfred Holmes's Dramatic Symphony, "Jeanne d'Arc," produced at the concert on the 27th February, must, we imagine, have given the utmost pleasure to its composer; for although certainly Madame Alvsleben, who sang the small part of the heroine, threw but little dramatic feeling into the music, band, chorus, and conductor worked with a will in the highest degree commendable. But those who have ears to hear and a judgment with which to sift good from bad, must have been sorely vexed to find a "Holmes Festival" got up at their expense; and, in truth, many around us seemed much disposed to show, in very unmistakable terms, a disposition to resent the affront. But the natural courtesy of a modern audience prevailed—feeble applause was permitted to creep in undisturbed throughout the work, and at its conclusion the composer was called forward, and bowed his acknowledgments. The "Dramatic Symphony" is in five parts, each descriptive of the varied phases in the career of the heroic Maid. In the first part, when the voices could be heard above the mass of instrumentation, there were some redeeming points, especially where the fugal subject is treated apart from the chorus. In the second part, after the attempt to depict the "misery and oppression of France," we have a solo for Joan, which is simply lugubrious, without being pathetic. The third part contains military music, the noise of which utterly obscures any ideas which a sight of the score might reveal. The fourth and fifth parts become positively wearisome from the utter want of any point to arrest the attention; but in the "Martyrdom" we have some good writing—notably in the triple chorus of women, and in the orchestral movement descriptive of the death of Joan. That Mr. Holmes has studied in France, is amply proved by his instrumentation. But we should be sorry to judge the masters by the pupil; for although the French school of orchestration has many defects, it has also many beauties; and a student in music, like a student in painting, should know that it is not by heaping on, but by judiciously blending, the material at his command, that legitimate effects are obtained. "Jeanne d'Arc," although it may not again be heard in this country, must be long remembered as a striking instance of mistaken ambition. As we have already said, the general rendering of the work was everything that could be desired, and we must not forget to mention that the little music assigned to the Inquisitor was given with much effect by Mr. Whitney. The English version of the text (translated from the original French of Madame Alfred Holmes) has been ably rendered by Mr. Joseph Bennett. On the following Saturday, in memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, the programme consisted (with one exception) exclusively of a selection from his works. The overtures, "Die Waldnymphe" and "Paradise and the Peri," are already tolerably familiar to the public; but "Parisina" was a comparative novelty, and its many beauties were the theme of general admiration with the audience. Miss Agnes Zimmermann proved herself an able exponent of the pianoforte Concerto (No. 3) in C minor; and the vocal music was well supported by Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and four students of the Royal Academy of Music—Misses Jessie Jones and Thekla Fischer, Messrs. H. Guy and Wadmore. Mr. T. Wingham's "Elegy on the death of Sir Sterndale Bennett," a graceful composition, introducing the subject of the Barcarolle in the fourth Concerto, was an appropriate tribute from one of the deceased composer's most promising pupils. The violin Concerto, in G, of Herr Joachim, played at the concert on the 13th ult. by the composer, created a genuine effect; but we question whether much of its success was not owing to the excellence of its interpretation. The movements are well written, but the subjects scarcely lay hold of the sympathies of an audience. The vocal music at these concerts is still, as a rule, both in character and execution, scarcely up to the high standard which should be aimed at. Good compositions are occasionally introduced; but music-lovers who are attracted to Sydenham by the classical nature of the instrumental portion of the programme, can hardly be expected to feel an interest in such songs as "She wandered down the mountain-side," and "The Nightingale's Trill."

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

The attendance at the Welsh and Irish concerts at this establishment have fully proved the strong sympathy with genuine national music amongst those who are the main support of what may be termed "popular" concert-rooms. The first of these, on St. David's Day, must have delighted not only the natives of the Principality, but the numerous and still increasing lovers of Welsh music resident in, or attracted to, the metropolis, by the tempting programme provided. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Lizzie Evans, Madame Patey, Miss Marian Williams, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Ap Herbert, and Mr. Lewis Thomas; and the solo-instrumentalists, Messrs. John Thomas and Wright (harp), and Mr. Brinley Richards and Miss Bessie Waugh (pianoforte); the vocal music being ably accompanied by Mr. Randegger and Mr. W. H. Thomas. In every respect, the concert was a genuine success. The Irish Festival, on St. Patrick's Eve, was supported by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Miss Julia Wigan, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Signor Foli, in the vocal department; and Mr. Levy's cornet playing was, as usual, one of the great features of the programme. There was some very good part-singing, which elicited much applause, Pinsuti's "Irlanda," in which "The Last Rose of Summer" is introduced, and some choral arrangements of Irish airs, by Dr. Stewart, being amongst the most effective pieces. Mr. Randegger was the accompanist. On the 9th ult. an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was given, the principal parts being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Whitney. The instrumental portions of the "Hymn of Praise" were played with admirable effect, and the choir evidenced throughout the result of most careful and judicious training. The "Stabat Mater" also went well, the brilliant and melodious themes telling with additional effect after Mendelssohn's religious and thoughtful work. On Monday, Wednesday, and Friday in Holy Week Bach's St. Matthew "Passion Music" was given, and on Saturday Handel's "Messiah." These performances are now annually looked forward to with the greatest interest; and the listeners on each occasion have appeared more like a congregation in a place of worship than an audience in a concert-room. At all the concerts during the month Mr. Barnby has conducted with his usual decision and intelligence, and Dr. Stainer has rendered most important service at the organ.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

It was a graceful act on the part of this Society to commence its sixty-third season, on the 18th ult., with a programme the first part of which was entirely selected from the compositions of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, who not only wrote works expressly for the Society, but successfully conducted its concerts for so many years. The orchestral Prelude to the music of Sophocles' "Ajax," which commenced the performance, has already been given here and noticed by us; but the Funeral March, from the same work, had never before been heard, and was universally pronounced one of Bennett's very finest compositions. The wonderful beauty of the themes, as well as their artistic treatment, and the exquisite instrumental colouring of the entire piece, seemed thoroughly appreciated by the audience, and the applause at its conclusion was spontaneous and universal. "The Woman of Samaria" (written for the Birmingham Festival of 1867) followed, and was received with the warmest demonstrations of approval, although its general execution was by no means up to the high standard expected at these concerts. The principal parts were sustained by Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Santley, who elicited an unanimous encore for the beautiful unaccompanied Quartet, "God is a Spirit." The principal feature in the second part of the concert was the fine performance of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, by Herr Joachim, who created the usual amount of enthusiasm on retiring from the orchestra. It should be mentioned that Mr. Millais's portrait of Sir Sterndale Bennett (kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Case) was suspended on the balcony fronting the orchestra, and that Signor Trentanove's bust of the composer was placed immediately opposite. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted, as usual.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

The Passion Service at St. Paul's took place on Tuesday in Holy Week, as usual. The doors were opened at half-past five, at which time several thousands of people were waiting for admission, although the service did not commence till seven o'clock. The Miserere, which preceded the selection from Bach's (S. Matthew) Passion, was finely rendered (without accompaniment) by the choir, numbering in all about three hundred voices. The Rev. J. Sparrow Simpson, D.D., intoned the alternate verses of the psalm with great clearness. Bach's grand work was accompanied by a band of sixty performers, led by Mr. Frank Amor; and by the organ, at which Mr. George Cooper presided with his usual ability. The solos were entirely given by members of the choir—Masters Grover, Hollis, and Bradbury; Messrs. Kenningham, Thornton, Winn, De Lacy, Horscroft, and Kempton. The violin obbligato to "Have mercy upon me, O God," admirably sung by Master Grover, was so beautifully played by Mr. Amor that its effect will not easily be forgotten by those who heard it. The words of our Lord were throughout taken by Mr. Winn, whose pure voice and thoughtful reading did ample justice to this important part. The trying tenor parts were equally divided between Mr. Kenningham and Mr. Thornton, who deserve great credit, not only for their distinct enunciation, but for their strict adherence to the text of the music. The choruses were vividly sung, and with more precision than on former occasions, probably owing to the fact that the singers were on slightly raised platforms, and could therefore see with ease the batôn of Dr. Stainer, who conducted from a desk behind the lectern. Mr. F. Walker accompanied the recitatives on the pianoforte. The service was altogether of a most solemn and mpressive character.

The "Concordia."—With reference to the advertisement which appears on the first page of our present issue, amateurs of music everywhere will be glad to see that an earnest endeavour is making to give the art of Music a journalistic representative worthy of its importance. Without unduly reflecting upon our present weekly musical contemporaries, it may be said that none of them cover all the ground available in such a manner as that no room exists for another worker. The Concordia proposes to fill up the blank spaces, and the list of distinguished writers given in the prospectus is a sufficient guarantee that this mission will be satisfactorily accomplished. As the sister arts are to receive attention, cultivated readers may look for a journal which, in many respects, will deserve their sympathy and support.

Mr. Willem Coenen's three "Chamber Concerts of Modern Music," at St. George's Hall, have met with all the success so enterprising a scheme merited. The programme of the first performance, on the 4th ult., commenced with a trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, by Joachim Raff, a composition replete with beauty, and so clear in design as to contrast strangely with the pretentious quartett, in A minor, of Brahms, the next important piece in the evening's selection. This work belongs to a school with which we confess to have no sympathy. The third movement—"Quasi Minuetto"—has an occasional unsatisfactory three-bar rhythm, to us more curious than pleasing; but there is vigorous writing in the last movement, the treatment of all the instruments being effective in the highest degree. It was a relief, however, to listen to the marked themes and orthodox workmanship in Mr. A. C. Mackenzie's quartett in E flat major, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, although we admit that the composition shows some signs of crudity. The "Scherzo" has much brightness, and the last movement is vivacious, and written with a freedom which augurs well for the future of a composer whose name is, we confess, new to us. The vocal music was entrusted to Miss Sophie Ferrari and Miss Antoinette Sterling, both of whom were most warmly received, the latter eliciting an encore for Rubinstein's song, "Klinge, Klinge mein Pandero," when she gave Schumann's "Doppelganger," with much dramatic feeling. The instrumental executants during the evening seemed perfectly at home with the music, although Herr Wiener, who held the first violin, was scarcely in tune with his companions. We never heard Mr. Coenen play so finely. In Raff's charming composition his elastic touch, finished execution, and sympathy with the varied shades of feeling in each movement, drew forth the warmest applause, and Mr. Mackenzie had every reason to congratulate himself upon having so able an interpreter of the pianoforte part of his quartett, for the passages are by no means those which an inferior player could grasp with due effect. Every praise is also due to Messrs. Amor (violin), Zerbini (viola), and Lasserre (violoncello), all of whom were thoroughly efficient. The selection at the two remaining concerts was equally interesting, Gernsheim's quartett in E flat major, J. Svendsen's otetto in A major, and C. Jos. Brambach's quartett in E flat major, being amongst the most important works given. In addition to the names of the artists already mentioned, Mr. Coenen was assisted by Messrs. M. Vogell and Jung (violin), A. Stehling (viola), and Daubert and C. Ould (violoncello); and in the vocal department by Mdlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Anna Williams, Mdlle. Helène Arnim, and Miss Julia Elton. Mr. J. B. Zerbini was a most efficient accompanist.

We understand that Messrs. Novello and Co. have succeeded in making arrangements with the proprietors of the work for the production of Verdi's "Requiem" at the Royal Albert Hall Concerts during the month of May. Madame Stolz (soprano), Madame Waldmann (contralto), Signor Masini (tenor), and Signor Medini (baritone), are specially engaged to take part in the performances, which will be given under the personal direction of the composer. The interest which the "Requiem" has already excited, the introduction into England of the four above-named artists, each of whom has a great continental reputation, and the presence of Signor Verdi himself, will certainly render the production of the work the chief musical event of the season.

Brixton Choral Society.—A highly successful performance of Spohr's Oratorio of "Calvary" was given on Monday night at the Angell Town Institution, by the members of the Brixton Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. William Lemare. The room was crowded to excess, and the efforts of the amateurs appeared to afford complete satisfaction to the audience. The choral singing was remarkably good, even in balance, and generally excellent, as far as the attack was concerned; and that considerable attention had been paid to rehearsal was evident in the firmness and solidity with which the exacting Chorus of Disciples (No. 11)—including the cleverly-wrought fugue "Thou alone art his refuge"—was delivered. The voices are fresh, and, though not including a very large number, have plenty of tone. Their culture speaks no little praise for Mr. Lemare's ability and attention. We can scarcely examine the solo singing with the same unalloyed satisfaction, but as the vocalists were for the most part amateurs, it behoves us not to be too particular. Mr. Montem Smith, an accomplished and tried artist, lent valuable assistance to the music by supporting the narrative and reflective rôle allotted to the Apostle John; and Mr. Robert Hilton, a baritone of fair average powers, effectively sang the music allotted to the Apostle Peter. The lady vocalists were not so successful, the exponent of Mary in particular displaying very faulty intonation. Mr. James Coward and Mr. J. G. Boardman were the accompanists at the pianoforte and organ respectively. Before the commencement of the Oratorio the Dead March in "Saul," and the quartett, "God is a Spirit" ("Woman of Samaria") were performed in tribute to the memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett.—Standard, March 24.

The Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians will take place at Willis's Rooms on the 10th inst., under the presidency of the Right Hon. the Earl Beauchamp. Many artists of eminence have kindly volunteered their valuable services on the occasion.

We are informed that the Musical Festival in Cincinnati (U.S.A.) commences on the 11th May, and that there are to be four evening and three morning concerts. The band and chorus will number about one thousand, the choir having been for some time under the efficient training of Herr Otto Singer. Amongst the works included in the programme are Beethoven's 7th and 9th Symphonies, Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Schubert's Symphony in C, Liszt's music to Herder's "Prometheus," Bach's Magnificat in D, Brahms's "Triumphal Hymn," and selections from Wagner's "Lohengrin." The principal vocalists are Mrs. H. M. Smith, Miss Annie Carey, Mr. Wm. Winch, and Mr. M. W. Whitney, who has been expressly engaged for the Festival, but will return to London early in the autumn.

The second Concert of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir was given at St. James's Hall, on the 12th ult., the programme consisting entirely of sacred music. Luca Marenzio's "Magnificat," for double choir, Samuel Wesley's fine Motet, "In exitu Israel," and Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," were perhaps the most finished specimens of choral singing during the evening; but in every respect the rendering of the whole of the pieces reflected the utmost credit upon all concerned. Miss Eva Leslie, by her exquisite singing of the Air "Blessed are the poor in spirit," from "Immanuel," deepened the impression she made on her first appearance, and fairly won the warm applause with which she was greeted. The other vocalists were Miss Bolingbroke (Parepa-Rosa Scholar at the Royal Academy of Music), Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Riccardi. Mr. Leslie conducted, and Mr. J. C. Ward was the accompanist.

At the Fourth Concert of the Prague Conservatoriums der Musik, on the 7th ult., Mr. C. Oberthür performed a concerto for Harp and Orchestra by Parish Alvars, and also a Harp Solo, entitled "Souvenir de Londres."

A concert was given on the 19th ult. by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read. A selection from the "Creation" was the principal feature in the first part, the second part consisting of part-songs, pianoforte solos, &c. The concert was very successful, the pianoforte playing of Messrs. Short and Price being much admired. Mr. E. Barnes conducted.

It is with much regret that we record the death of Mr. Richard Limpus, organist and director of the choir at St. Michael's, Cornhill. Mr. Limpus was well known as a highly educated musician and also as the composer of many sacred works. The College of Organists, which he founded, and of which he held the post of Secretary, will seriously feel his loss, for he was most earnest and indefatigable in the promotion of its best interests. His death took place on the 15th ult., at the comparatively early age of fifty.

The first concert of the British Orchestral Society for the present season was given at St. James's Hall, on the 10th ult., in the presence of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, Patron of the Society. The programme was devoted exclusively to the works of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, and included the Symphony in G minor, the Overtures, "Naiades" and "Paradise and the Peri," and the pianoforte Concerto in F minor. All these compositions seemed familiar to the fine band engaged; but the general rendering of them was deficient in that delicacy and variety of colouring for which the works of the composer are so remarkable. Miss Florence May, was the pianist, and on the whole acquitted herself of her difficult task with credit. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Augusta Roche, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Wadmore. Mr. Mount conducted, as usual.

An excellent concert was given on Monday evening, the 15th ult., in the hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute. A capital programme was excellently performed. The conductor, Mr. A. Carder (an organist of much repute), was ably assisted by Miss Jessie Royd, Madame Patey, Mr. Turner, and Mr. Patey, Herr Westeman (flute), and Miss Annie Talbot and Miss Weybret Waller (pupils of Mr. Carder), pianoforte.

Mr. Walter Bache deserves the utmost credit for his annual attempt to popularise the music of his master, Dr. Franz Liszt, in this country; but should be reminded that he does not aid his cause by denying the right of any person to differ from himself in opinion upon the merits of the compositions he submits for judgment. The "Analytical Remarks" issued at his concert at St. James's Hall on the 25th February (parts of which are written with an acrimonious spirit by no means to be commended) in reality do not tell us anything that we did not know before. That the Concerto, No. 2, in A major, is a Concerto we may reasonably admit, because the composer calls it so; and therefore why, at page 10, are we informed of this fact? That a "genuine artist will almost invariably work in unison with the spirit of his time" can also be conceded; and if, in thus working in his Masses and Psalms Dr. Liszt only approaches "the traditional forms" here and there, "as it were, per accidens," we freely allow his right to do so; but if, in listening to the Concerto, we are wearied with the want of method, and utterly unable to discover any continuity in the ideas, and in the Psalm we cannot but feel that the very "individuality" of the composer—which is so much dwelt upon—occasionally prevents the expression of that purely devotional feeling which touches all hearts, is it a crime to give utterance to our convictions? Nay, even if we believe that, brilliant as is the orchestration of Weber's "Polonaise," Dr. Liszt has no more right to meddle with the work of a great writer than a modern painter has to touch up the picture of an old master, we beg to be allowed to give this opinion to the world without being placed upon our trial by those who do not agree with us. The fine orchestra, under the able direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow (who conducted the entire concert) gave the utmost effect to the "Festklänge" (No. 7 of the "Poëmes Symphoniques"), a work replete with passages of the utmost beauty, and instrumented with a consummate knowledge of orchestral colouring. Its excessive length, however, and the want of any break materially detracted from its success, even with an audience disposed especially to appreciate every item of this "concert of the future." Mr. Bache's performance of the Concerto already mentioned was masterly in the extreme; his delicacy of phrasing and perfect command of the most difficult and intricate passages eliciting applause as warm as it was well deserved. In the Psalm, for Tenor solo, Chorus and Orchestra, Mr. Guy most efficiently supplied the place of Mr. W. H. Cummings (absent from indisposition), and the choir sang so finely as to bring out all the best effects of the work; but, in spite of the unquestionable power displayed throughout this elaborate composition, the feeling of disappointment to which we have already alluded could not be shaken off at its conclusion. Liszt's two choruses—"Soldatenlied" (from Goethe's "Faust") and the chorus of Reapers (from Herder's "Prometheus") created a genuine effect, the latter especially—a delicate pastoral piece—being quite a relief after the pretentious compositions to which we had listened previously. Schubert's Hymn for female voices, "Gott in der natur," is a fine work, and full of true religious feeling; the instrumentation (from the composer's pianoforte accompaniment, according to the rule of the modern Germans) added most skilfully by Dr. Hans von Bülow. Weber's Polonaise in E—with orchestral accompaniments and patches by Liszt—was magnificently performed by Mr. Bache, who on being encored, gave it as Weber wrote it, and although he did not play it so well, we liked it better. The concert concluded with a brilliant rendering of the Overture to "Tannhäuser."

The Council of the Royal Polytechnic College, Regent Street, has recently established a Choral Society, the object of which is to practise and publicly perform vocal works, both sacred and secular. The conductor is Mr. H. Herbert Wilson.

We are glad to announce that Mr. G. A. Macfarren has been elected to the Cambridge Musical Chair without opposition, the other candidates having gracefully retired from the field. No choice more thoroughly in consonance with the feeling of all who desire that the art in its highest aspect shall be represented by the University Professor, could possibly have been made.

The death of Signor Giulio Perkins, which occurred on the 24th February, at the Queen's Hotel, Manchester, is a serious loss both to the operatic stage and the concert-room. As a bass singer, he was gradually earning a high position in his profession; and personally, as well as artistically, his sudden decease has caused an universal feeling of regret. He had been married but a few months to Madame Marie Roze.

Although not himself a musical artist, Mr. Benjamin Lumley, who died on the 17th ult., had been so long connected with Operatic affairs that a record of his decease may appropriately appear in a musical journal. As Director of Her Majesty's Theatre during Jenny Lind's performances in this country, and a zealous upholder of the Ballet when criticisms upon dancing occupied almost as much space in our newspapers as those upon music, his name will be long remembered; and those who would give honour where honour is due should call to mind that he succeeded Mr. Laporte as Lessee of our then one aristocratic Lyrical establishment at a time when it became very doubtful whether its fortunes could be upheld even for another season.

At the March Concert of the St. George's Glee Union, Chopin's Funeral March was played by Miss Ellen Bliss, and the choir sang "Forgive, blest shade," in memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett. A selection of sacred choruses, quartetts, and songs followed. "O Father" (Judas), "The heavens are telling" (Creation), were well sung by the choir, and the quartett, "God is a Spirit" (Bennett), was excellently rendered by Misses Spear and Bayley, and Messrs. Jekyll and Thurley Beale. Miss Horder gave "On mighty pens" with much success, and Mr. Thurley Beale's singing of "There is a green hill" (Gounod) was greatly admired. Mr. Garside conducted, and Messrs. Jekyll and Kinkee were the accompanists.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in C. Composed by James Shaw.

This Service was composed for the festival in St. Paul's Cathedral, in 1874, of the London Church Choir Association, to the members of which body the work is dedicated. There is great merit in Mr. Shaw's music; but it strongly indicates the tendency of the times to colour the writings for the sanctuary with those glaring, nay garish, hues that used to distinguish the secular from the sacred, and even to signalise some amount of extravagance in the former. Some composers who are as yet better known than our present author, are perhaps more responsible than he for the familiarisation of the chromatic element in the cathedral atmosphere, and in their music may be discerned the influence of M. Gounod's example more obviously than the indications of original power. Another surmise may be admissible as to the cause of the direction church music is now taking, and this is the far greater facility of wandering semitonically from chord to chord and, without musical plan, from key to key, than of writing pure counterpoint and limiting the rage of modulation within the tonality of relationship. True, it may be argued that in all times—those of the madrigalists, those of Purcell, those of Handel and Bach, those of Mozart and Haydn, and those of Beethoven—the same men have written in the same manner, or style, or school, whether to sacred or secular subjects; but while this argument is not to be answered, the opinion must be offered that the style now coming into vogue is a questionable style, be it applied to whatever purposes it may. Some separate occasion may better serve for the full discussion of this serious subject; let us now speak, with what brevity may be, of the composition before us. We much admire the doxology which, with slight modification of the beginning, is the same in both canticles. In this, the responses of the two sides of the choir give capital vitality to the effect, and still more so does the motion in crotchets of some one or other of the parts during the detached exclamations of the rest. The trio for adult voices, "He hath filled the hungry," pleases us greatly, so too does the opening of the Nunc dimittis, which is simple, fresh, and beautifully appropriate to the text. A good idea of vocal distribution is evident throughout, and some of the modulations are decidedly brilliant. The occasional diversity of motion in the several parts—some having longer against the shorter notes of others—and the accompaniment of unisonous vocal phrases with figures having a different accentuation, help materially in the general interest. We are indebted to the title-page, however, for the knowledge that the Magnificat is in the key of C, for the music modulates thence in the fifth bar, and returns not until the words "and to the Son" are sung for the third time, and even then the key is rendered somewhat indefinite by still further changes. Objection must be taken to the leap from the bass of a chord of E minor in the second inversion, which occurs on the word "rejoiced" (p. 2), and again, though in a different passage, at "throughout all generations." We must protest, too, against the consecutive fourths with the bass on the words "all people" (p. 14). There are several instances, in different keys, of a chord that is once written and is then followed by the second inversion of a chord of C; the prominence of the fourth from the bass in the prior chord is so great as to make this harmony sound like an inversion of the chord of the seventh of B, whereas its approach and resolution show it to be the diminished seventh of F sharp written with false notation, or what will correspond with this in the different keys, and the effect is, to us at least, far from agreeable. The virtues, however, outweigh the sins of the work, and we have strong hopes of the author's future.

Te Deum Laudamus, set to music in the key of C major, with Organ obbligato. By Langdon Colborne, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

This clever composition might almost be described as a study on the perpetual motion of four in a bar, for its ingenious continuance is only so far broken as to invalidate the description, yet scarcely so far as to prevent some little effect of monotony. An evidence of intelligent design in the plan of the work is the appropriate recurrence of the opening music at the words "Day by day," and again—as if to say that implicit confidence in the Lord was the true praise, magnification and worship of God—at the words "O Lord, in Thee have I trusted." The reading is not new, but is none the less contradictory to the text, to direct the song of all angels, the Heavens, the Powers therein, the Cherubin and Seraphin, to be sung softly. There is great harshness in the harmony to the words "God of Sabaoth," wherein the top part B proceeds to C, while C is repeated in the tenor. Less extreme than this is the combination at "sharpness of death," but it is far from agreeable to have the first four successive notes of the musical alphabet sounded together. The largely prevailing unison for all the voices, or for either the adult or the juvenile singers while the others rest, is effectively diversified by the occasional full vocal harmony; there is a direction, however, that the whole may optionally be sung in unison. The canticle is written in the white notation of the dance tunes of the seventeenth century and earlier, ignoring the crotchets and quavers that are sanctified by the religious music of Handel and Bach; but the grave character of the melody throughout better beseems the archaic fancy than do the trivial hymn tunes that now-a-days are often vested in this ill-fitting appearance. The work is dedicated to the Warden and Fellows of the Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's College at Tenbury, where the author is highly distinguished as the organist.

Veni Domine. Motett, by Wilhelm Schulthes.

This, like several other pieces by the same author that have been noticed in our columns, was composed for the private devotions of the ladies in an establishment at Roehampton, called the Religious of the Sacred Heart. It is for a chorus of sopranos and contraltos, interspersed with brief solos, and an accompaniment for organ and harp, in which the latter instrument charmingly brightens the effect and marks the accent. We like it less than some of its companion pieces, but, like them, it is well aimed at its purpose. An arrangement of the Motett for female and male voices is also printed. The publication comprises music for the Elevation composed for organ and harp, which is mystic if not beautiful, and may meet the romantic views of many hearers; ourselves would prefer a defined melody with simpler harmony for the occasion.

Bird of Love. Song. Words by E. E. R.

The Wren's Nest. Song. Words by the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

Composed by J. Lemmens.

The many who have heard Madame Sherrington's charming rendering of the first of these songs will be glad to find that, although they can scarcely hope to approach the perfection with which it was sung by the artist, for whom, we presume, it was expressly written, the passages are so extremely vocal that a very good idea of the composition may be given by a singer of even moderate ability. The melody is bright, and well suited to the words; and without any pretension to more than appropriate harmonies and accompaniments, there is sufficient evidence throughout that it is the work of a good musician. The edition before us is well suited for pure soprano voices—as it reaches the A in alt.—but it is also published a major third lower. "The Wren's Nest" is a pathetic little story, and will require good singing to make it effective. The lingering on the dominant of the minor key, for the expression of the words "Forgive me," and the change to the tonic major, where the work of the merry little architects is described, are points which show that the composer has thought in sympathy with the poet. Like the song already noticed, the accompaniments are simple in the extreme, and the vocalist is therefore left to tell the tale with only an instrumental support. This song has also been sung by Madame Sherrington at the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall, and invariably received with marked favour.

Yes. Song. Words by W. J. Stewart. Composed by Jacques Blumenthal.

This song is full of character, and there is much quaintness in the treatment of the often recurring word forming the title of the composition. The voice-part being doubled by the left hand of the accompanist at the commencement, is an effective point, a good contrast being gained by the change to the flowing quavers, on the words "Will she hear me when I whisper?" The alterations of key are perhaps somewhat too frequent; but the evident aim of the composer has been to express the feeling of the verses, rather than to write a pattern ballad. After the agitato triplet accompaniment, the sudden transition to rapid arpeggios gives much effect to the concluding phrases, the desire to escape conventional forms being apparent throughout. We can scarcely doubt that this song will become popular.

Wayside Sketches, for the Pianoforte. By Arthur O'Leary.

This is No. 4 of a series of trifles for the pianoforte by a composer who, from the unambitious attempts he has hitherto placed before the public, proves that he has wisely resolved to travel on his artistic career rather with safety than rapidity. His sketches which have come before us evidently spring from an earnest and thoughtful mind which cannot fail to produce solid results if carefully developed; and if Mr. O'Leary will receive from us a counsel as kindly as it is meant, we would sincerely urge him to shun "arrangements," and devote himself entirely to original works, for which, both in his instrumental and vocal compositions, he has already indicated the possession of undoubted talent. Of all his "Wayside Sketches," we think the one under notice decidedly the best. The opening subject is full of vitality; and the second theme, in the subdominant, with its characteristic accompaniment, is not only extremely melodious, but striking as a contrast of style. The novel treatment of the first motive, towards the conclusion, prevents any feeling of monotony in the piece, the character of which is well preserved to the end. Slight as is the texture of this composition, it will require a poetical temperament, as well as a trained finger, to do it full justice.

Welsh Melodies, with Welsh and English Poetry. By John Jones (Talhairn) Ceiriog Hughes, Mynyddog, Thomas Oliphant, and Charles H. Purday. Arranged for one voice, and also harmonised for four voices, with accompaniment for Harp or Pianoforte, by John Thomas (Pencerdd Gwalia).

The success of this work has been sufficiently demonstrated by the addition of two volumes beyond the number mentioned in the original plan. First published, in 1862, in two volumes, a third was issued in 1870, and a fourth last year, the collection now being undoubtedly the most perfect and valuable book of national melodies ever offered to the public. That the Editor's work has been truly a labour of love is proved by the care which has been exercised in the superintendence of the minutest details; and it may be mentioned that, although perhaps no translation can equal the force of the original, the English poetry throughout is not only excellent in itself, but so perfectly adapted to the airs as to make it appear—like that of Moore to the Irish Melodies—that notes and words arose simultaneously in the mind of their composers. In the preface to the third volume Mr. Thomas pays a graceful tribute to the memory of Talhairn, whose death occurred whilst engaged in completing his portion of the book, the Welsh poetry which fell to his share in the remainder of the volume being supplied by his friend Mr. Ceiriog Hughes, a writer, the Editor assures us (and on this point we must defer to his judgment), thoroughly competent to the task.

Original Pieces for the Organ, by Francis Edward Gladstone.

Two numbers of this publication are before us. One consists of a March, which, we say it with reluctance, is unworthy of its talented and fluent composer. Not that it has any definable points for objection, but that it has a lack of definite interest. It is, like all Mr. Gladstone's organ writing, excellently suited to the instrument. The other number comprises two pieces under the modest titles of "Melody in G," and "Melody in F." The best artists have their duller and brighter moments, and our author takes revenge for his less fortunate effort by presenting us here with a brace of charmingly attractive trifles. Trifles they are in extent but not in matter, trifles but not trifling. The epithet is perhaps misapplied to compositions, however brief, which betoken mastery and a happy impulse in its application. Still, it is used with no disregard for the pieces or for him who produced them, but as implying that they have the air of having come spontaneously into existence, each a single thought, and that a happy one. They will be played and heard with pleasure.

The Student's Manual of the Theory of Music. Intended as an Introduction to the Study of the Pianoforte-Harmonium, or Organ. By Joseph Porritt.

Why this book should be especially intended as an Introduction to the "Pianoforte-Harmonium, or Organ" we are at a loss to understand, seeing that these instruments are not mentioned throughout its pages. We may therefore regard it simply as a Manual of the Rudiments of Music; but if—as stated in the Preface—it really "contains sufficient to meet the requirements of the Committee of Council on Education, or to pass the Oxford and Cambridge Middle Class Examinations," we must say that the honour of passing through these ordeals is somewhat easily won. With the merely elementary portion of the work we have nothing to do, save that we cannot agree with the author that the adding of a line at the conclusion of a piece constitutes a "triple bar," more especially as others, of varying lengths, are often joined with this one. But, passing onwards, we find two explanations which puzzle us. "Disguised keys," we are told, "are those keys not indicated by the signature," and "a deceptive cadence is a close on the triad of the subdominant." Now why keys through which a piece modulates should be termed "disguised" we cannot comprehend, nor can we be made to understand how a "triad of the subdominant" can be a close of any kind. It is when we come to "Harmony," however, that we confess ourselves astonished, for the whole matter—or rather what is considered necessary for the "requirements" of the Examining bodies already named—is dismissed in one small page. After giving the triad and dominant seventh, with their inversions (the resolutions of the latter chord not even being mentioned) a composition of four bars, consisting wholly of triads—with the exception of a 6-4 on the dominant—appears, and then comes this gratifying announcement: "The following is a scheme by which the student can easily and critically examine any piece of music." This "scheme" is not very complicated, for it simply consists in pointing out the triads on the various degrees of the scale, a task which anybody, who had learned their technical names, could do without assistance. We have often said that we have no sympathy with Manuals like these, which only encourage children to run before they have been taught to walk. The rudiments of Harmony are we know difficult to acquire, especially by young people, and anybody who can simplify them deserves a good word from every conscientious teacher, but books like the one before us often do harm by standing in the place of better. What idea, for instance, can be formed of the nature of Diatonic Intervals when C to F♯ and F to B♮ are given as augmented 4ths, the student having been previously told that they are all counted from C? and can anybody imagine a worse jumble of Italian words than "tres corda?"

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

JOHN STAINER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—If I was to follow the advice tendered to me by members of the musical profession I should treat the letter of the above writer, in your last impression, with the contempt it deserves. Although I deny his right to catechise me in such an offensive manner, and which no real gentleman would have done, I do not desire to evade the subject to which he refers, and therefore will at once state that I will give a full and perfect answer, on certain conditions, and that it rests with you and him whether I shall do so or not. As I am Mr. Stainer's senior in years, and certainly in length of musical reputation, no just and sane individual will deny me the right to put a few pertinent questions to him before I answer those he has put to me. I ask, therefore:—

Firstly. How was it that he, an obtuse organist in the country (and called by a contemporary "the singing man at St. Paul's"), came to be quietly ensconced into the organ gallery of the Metropolitan Cathedral, without competition, and to the exclusion of men who had made their reputation before he was scarcely out of his teens?

Secondly. If the authorities at St. Paul's had the right, and the bad taste to quietly place a former "singing man," without competition, as their organist, does Mr. Stainer consider it a professional act towards eminent men to exclude them by non-competition—men such as Mr. George Cooper, and other well-known players, and with whom in fair competition he could have had no chance of election.

Thirdly. I ask Mr. Stainer whether he is not perfectly familiar with the University at which I took my degrees, and whether he is not bringing forward the subject out of petty and pitiful jealousy to try and do me an injury? I am afraid he has a very little mind, and as he refuses me my just title, I decline to give him his own.

Fourthly. I ask Mr. Stainer whether he thinks it a professional act and the act of a gentleman to moot such a question in a public manner? If he does, permit me to inform him that the general opinion is (from letters I am receiving) that if he had been a real gentleman, and not actuated by the malus animus, he would, in doubting the bonâ fide nature of my degrees, have written to me privately.

Fifthly. I ask Mr. Stainer whether he has not previously attacked me anonymously with reference to this subject, and whether he has not been in private correspondence, or in communication in propria personæ with a printer in the neighbourhood of his residence, who so libelled me that an investigation was instituted by a clergyman and a barrister resulting in an award wholly condemnatory of the said printer? I have a letter in my possession which, although not conclusive on the point, is extremely suspicious.

If this letter appears, and my former one with the paragraph from the Sunday Times, thus shewing that perfect fairness exists, I will (on receiving Mr. Stainer's full reply to my queries) pen a very full answer to his questions for the following number of your Journal. But I will be no party to any question that is discussed in an unfair and one-sided manner. You, as Editor, have already been grossly unjust. The flattering paragraph from the Sunday Times provoked jealousy, and because it was in my favour you rejected it. For the same reason, my letter assuring you that I knew not the name of the writer of the said article was refused insertion, and you write a leader to induce your readers to believe that in not giving it publicity you are playing the part of a friend! That letter has been sent by request for perusal to musicians who are evidently astonished at the want of justice evinced. Neither will you insert anything in my favour that appears from my friends; but it is to be regretted that you are so blind as not to see such injustice, and that the trumpet of Messrs. Stainer and Barnby is blown alternately ad nauseam, and until "the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint." I have only to add that I am profoundly indifferent whether or not you insert this letter and my former communication, because in the event of your not doing so it will be printed, together with all else on the subject, and freely circulated throughout the towns and villages of the United Kingdom.

Yours obediently,

1, Eastgate, Winchester, T. Lloyd Fowle.
March 12, 1875.

Dr. Fowle thinks it well to send to the Editor of the Musical Times the enclosed postcript to his letter posted last evening, in order that no unpleasantness or litigation may arise without due warning being given.

March 13, 1875.

P.S.—I think it well to caution you as to what you insert in your journal about my degrees, as undeniable proof can be given of their bonâ fide nature. A few years ago a contemporary only escaped an action for libel by printing an account of them in extenso, and I am determined if anything further is inserted that is false and libellous, I will prosecute to the utmost rigour of the law. I therefore warn you to be careful what you insert. I can say much on the subject of degrees, with which you and your readers do not appear to be familiar.

T. L. F.

[As Dr. Fowle requests, we print his letter precisely as we received it—even to the heading—together with the whole of the correspondence on the matter which has been forwarded to us. Dr. Stainer's reply to the above communication appears in our present number; and we now beg distinctly to state that, having originally broached this subject on public grounds, we shall avoid further personalities by refusing insertion to any future letter from Dr. Fowle which contains more than straightforward replies to Dr. Stainer's queries.—Ed. Musical Times.]

PROPOSED PENSION FOR DR. FOWLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Had you prefaced the remarks you have thought proper to make respecting myself in your February number, by inserting verbatim, the flattering paragraph from the Sunday Times, you were quite welcome to write whatever you pleased as far as I am concerned. It appears to me, however, quite superfluous to state "that the names of a few others who have done something for church music will be immediately called to mind," as such would undoubtedly be the case with all who are familiar with music and musicians. Nevertheless, de gustibus non est disputandum, will apply to music and composers as well as to other things; and even as regards the eminent musician who has so lately been honoured with a resting place in Westminster Abbey, the whole musical world is not of one voice respecting his merits. I have a letter written to me by one of the most eminent composers of the day at the time when the late Cambridge professor did not make any great mark with his 1862 Exhibition Ode, and in which he says, "I know nothing good of Bennett's." Very likely he had chosen to know nothing, but that I cannot tell. Only a year ago another scientific musician stated personally to me, "I know very little of Bennett's music, and what I do know I do not like." As this is a free country, I conclude that these musicians had a right to express such opinions; and by a parity of reasoning that those 2,000 persons who state that "I have done more for church music for country choirs than any man living," have a right to think and to say so if they think proper so to do, the dictum of the Musical Times notwithstanding. I am not so conceited as to expect every person to agree with such an assertion, but as I have not "blown my own trumpet," I am not called upon to throw cold water upon warm hearts. I know too much about criticism in general, and music in particular, to follow some of my brethren in the art by attempting anything great, but for more than twenty years I have studied the wants and capabilities of country choirs. That my labours should have been so appreciated as to enable 2,000 persons honestly to sign a petition to the Premier for a Civil Service Pension, is a gratifying testimonial which I assure you I shall continue to regard with a serenity and satisfaction wholly beyond the power of any one in the slightest degree to disturb.

Be so good as to insert this letter in your March impression, as I am very desirous that your readers should clearly understand that I am in profound ignorance of the name of the writer who gave me such a flattering paragraph in the Sunday Times, a journal that is well-known to stand high as a musical and literary authority. You may, however, refuse to do me the justice to insert this letter. If I am wrong in my surmise, I beg your pardon, and

I am, yours obediently,

1, Eastgate, Winchester, T. Lloyd Fowle.
Feb. 9, 1875.

An old Servant.—A petition has been presented to the Premier, signed by some 2,000 persons on behalf of Dr. Lloyd Fowle, of Eastgate, Winchester. It says, that "Your petitioners are desirous that Thomas Lloyd Fowle (styled 'The People's Musician'), Doctor of Music and Master of Arts, should be granted a pension from the Civil Service List, as a reward for the invaluable benefits he has conferred on the church by his many useful and excellent musical works, extending over a period of more than twenty years. Your petitioners are of opinion that the said T. L. Fowle has done more for church music for country choirs than any man living. The following list of works he has produced and published himself will show his untiring industry in the cause of useful music for the church and the people generally." We have not time or space to enumerate all the numerous works produced by this gentleman that have been so favourably received, but alas! with so little profit. It will be sufficient to state that many of his anthems have been approved of by many celebrities, and some have been patronised, but not so well as they have merited. The petitioners conclude their appeal by stating that "Although the works of the gentleman will for ever prove valuable and useful, Dr. Fowle has not derived the pecuniary benefit he has justly deserved, on account of the want of a sufficient capital during the many years he has laboured. He is now not in strong health, and has had a helpless wife for nearly twelve years." Dr. Fowle is an old servant of the public, and his contribution of sacred and secular music has been so large that we feel somewhat at a loss to find that more success has not attended his exertions from those whom he worked so zealously to please. It is to be hoped that the petitioners' request will not be passed unheeded.—Sunday Times.

DEGREES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I cannot but regret that Dr. Stainer should have been so acutely nettled as to be tempted to ask Dr. Fowle (who of course will treat all such queries with contempt) where he graduated, das ist ihm eigen. I do not say that Dr. Stainer does not support his title by his abilities, but, I must say that I myself know foreign graduates (whose names and learning I honour) to whom certain British ones could not hold a candle. Indeed, the standard of our British curriculum is very far short of "perfection's height." Dr. Stainer should, in his calm moments, ponder the decision of the Lord Chief Baron Kelly (where he gave damages) in the case of Dr. Kinns v. Arnold. "The learned judge" (says the Scholastic Register) "knew the law, and showed clearly the right to assume the title of Dr. by reason of a diploma received from any foreign university." And why not? Such impertinence from Dr. Stainer and tawdry parade of his British Doctorship (despised on the continent perhaps even more than he despises the foreign degree), deserve the storm of derision from musical artists which the faculty would meritoriously send sweeping over his scribatious cranium had he the impudence to question them, or to ask them to put the names of their Alma Maters after their titles. Why don't they do so? Some few indeed there are who occasionally—in intervals of despair or weakness—do sound their Alma Mater trumpet. I very well remember a wealthy and popular M.D. smiling scornfully at such an appendage, which forcibly reminds me of those vendors who give us to suppose that their goods possess some recherché virtue, by saying "see that the label has our own stamp on, as all others are impositions." Does not Dr. Stainer know that many of the greatest and most popular men in England— in every profession—are foreign graduates (of course not imposed on by an impostor), which is a very different thing indeed from being doctorated by an Archbishop. In the former case sterling ability, approved authorship and position, secure it; but in the latter the good opinion of the ecclesiastic secures it. Now, which title is the more inglorious; "An Artist," says the Musical Times of last month, "would gain more real honour by refusing than by accepting a title at the hands of an individual which he knows can only be legitimately* granted by one of the universities."

As for Dr. Stainer's question about the Mus. Bac., his narrow judgment there reaches its climax. Indeed, I could not have believed that he would ask such a silly question. But, perhaps, he never read or knew of British or foreign subjects, having the title of Doctor conferred on them without the Mus. Bac. shibboleth; and those honoured men understand perhaps as much about harmonic progressions, rhythmic divisions, and the internal sense of the tones as Dr. Stainer does, das kribbelt ihn im kopfe. Dr. Stainer's letter is not over clear; and had he considered the subject he would not have exhibited such a spirit of the green-eyed monster. Prima est eloquentia virtus, perspicuitas, et quoquisque ingenio minus valet hoc de magis attollere et dilatare conatur, ut statura breves in digitos eriguntur, et plura infirmi minantur.

Yours faithfully,

Thomas Gertrnde Barry,
Mus. Doc.

THOMAS LLOYD FOWLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I have much pleasure in replying to Mr. Fowle's queries, in the order in which they occur.

1. This question should have been addressed to the Dean and Chapter.

2. Yes.

3. I have not the smallest conception where, when, or how, Mr. Fowle became a Doctor and a Master of Arts. I am not jealous of Mr. Fowle.

4. Yes. Titles publicly used are open to public criticism.

5. Certainly not. I know absolutely nothing of the printer mentioned by Mr. Fowle. I have never had any communication, signed or anonymous, with any printer, person, paper or periodical, except the Musical Times (in last number), on the subject of Mr. Fowle's University status, or anything else connected with him.

He is quite at liberty to take any further steps he may deem advisable, with regard to any "suspicious" letter he possesses.

I now claim the fulfilment of Mr. Fowle's promise to answer my questions printed in your last issue.

Yours faithfully,

John Stainer,
M.A., Mus. Doc., Oxon.

* This is a misunderstanding, the Archbishop's degree being as perfectly legal as any other. However, its legality and honour are two very different things.

THE WAGNER THEORY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—"F. C.'s" questions bear only indirectly on my letter; but, availing myself of your kind permission, I will endeavour to answer them in as few words as possible. The notion that Wagner is merely re-propounding the theory of Gluck is a mistaken one. Gluck, like Wagner, was an earnest, true-hearted musician, who would concede nothing to popular taste, and as such he will always be reverenced by those who value truth before everything else; he was, thanks to the intellectual thought he bestowed on his work, a purifier of his art, and so far in advance of his age that many of the subsequent "less philosophical writers," to whom "F. C." alludes, owe him an incalculable debt; but the one fact that he was no poet (in the limited sense of the word) would alone have prevented him from being the founder of the Wagner theory. ("F. C." may remark that neither I nor any other of Wagner's disciples claim for him the honour of being the first musician who had a theory, but the first to whom theory taught the perfect amalgamation of music and poetry.)

To come to "F. C.'s" second question; we do not found our belief that the standard of Richard Wagner will be borne triumphantly through future ages on the simple fact that he has a theory, but on the firm foundation that that theory contains the essence of all that has been proved true and beautiful, and therefore eternal, in time past; and because, like all earnest men in art as well as religion and nature, what he does is the mirror of what he says.

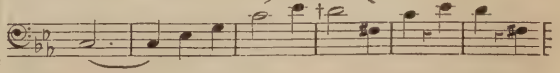
MEDDLING WITH THE OLD MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Your correspondent, "Allegro," will find an explanation of the omission of two bars in Beethoven's C minor Symphony, in a letter from the composer to his publisher, dated 21st August, 1810, (quoted by Professor Otto Jahn, in an article* in the Grenzboten, 1864.

Beethoven's words are—"I have found the following mistake in the Symphony in C minor, namely, in the third movement in $\frac{3}{4}$ time; where, after the major, the entry of the minor stands thus. I take the bass part:



the two bars over which the † stands, are too much, and must be struck out: and, of course, the same in all the other parts, which rest."

Jahn then goes on to say that "in the copy sent to be engraved the struck-out bars are marked (1) and the two following (2); and then, above, in red pencil, is written—'Si replica con trio, allora 2.'" Beethoven therefore had originally intended that the whole Scherzo and Trio should be repeated, and then the Coda should follow, but had afterwards given up the repetition, which the engraver did not understand.

* Reprinted in Jahn's Gesammelte Aufsätze über Musik, Leipzig, 1866. Jahn's Article on "The Editions of Beethoven's Works" contains much that is worth reading, which is not to be found elsewhere.

The state of the case is proved by—1st, the original score; 2ndly, the separate parts, from which the Symphony was repeatedly played under Beethoven's own direction. None of these contain the bars in question. They have therefore been struck out of the later editions.

Malvern, 17th March. An Old Subscriber.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

Mr. W. H. Main is informed that, as the concert to which he refers took place on the 21st January, there was ample time for him to furnish us with a notice upon it for the next month's number. As we did not, however, receive it until the 9th of February, it was thrown aside (with many others) as "too late."

Correspondents who write asking for reviews upon works which have been forwarded to us are informed that we can only make a selection from the compositions sent. One composer who seems to think it "unfair" that his Waltzes have not been noticed, may rest assured that we have been compelled to put aside pieces of much greater importance.

"A Reader of your valuable Paper."—The letter of our correspondent draws attention to a subject which is certainly of importance to readers of music. Many reforms might be carried out which would materially simplify the matter—for instance, we think that if × were used for the sharp, and ♯ for the double sharp, there would be less danger of confusion.

A Choirmaster.—Without knowing all the circumstances it is impossible to give a decided opinion, but we should think that an increase of power in the treble stops would be most likely to keep the trebles in tune.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Baltimore, U.S.—The Peabody Institute of the city of Baltimore gave the sixth concert on the 6th February. Mr. Richard Hoffman, of New York, was the solo pianist, and his performance of Mozart's Concerto, No. 8 in D minor was highly appreciated, being rapturously applauded. Mr. Hoffman also gave his own graceful composition entitled "Solitude."

Bath.—Mr. W. Pyatt's Ballad Concert took place on the 5th ult. at the Theatre, and was a decided success, notwithstanding Mr. Sims Reeves was prevented from fulfilling his engagement, by indisposition. Mr. Turner, who has been for some time a popular member of Carl Rosa's Opera Company, sang the songs allotted to Mr. Reeves, and was highly successful, being encored in nearly all his solos. Mr. Santley was in splendid voice, and cheerfully accepted the encores given to him. Madame Thaddeus Wells and Miss Helen D'Alton sang several ballads charmingly, gaining encores, and Balfe's duet, "Trust her not," was given with great spirit. In Bishop's "Lo! here the gentle lark," Madame Wells was accompanied most brilliantly on the flute by Mr. Nicholson, who afterwards played a fantasia of his own, which the audience insisted on hearing again. Miss Bertha Brousil's violin playing was a great feature in the evening. Mr. Naylor conducted the concert, and his playing in duets with the violin and flute showed that he is an accomplished pianist.

Birkenhead.—On Thursday the 11th ult. the Musical Society gave a performance of Handel's Serenata Acis and Galatea, which formed the first part of the concert. The band and chorus numbered about 100, and the solo vocalists were Madame Billinie-Porter, Mr. C. Wilson, Mr. J. Trainer and Signor Olano, all of whom were highly efficient. The "Lay of the last Minstrel" (Barnett) was well played in the second part, and Madame B. Porter gave an excellent reading of Sir W. S. Bennett's "May Dew." The "chorus of Druids," a composition of the conductor's, was re-demanded, and Mendelssohn's Cornelius March brought the concert to a close. Mr. W. T. Argent conducted.

Birmingham.—The musical season here is rapidly drawing to a close. The Festival Choral Society gave its last subscription concert on February 25th, when the Creation and Haydn's First Mass were performed. The soloists were Madame Avisleben, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Mr. Lewis Thomas.——The last of Mr. Stockley's Orchestral Concerts took place in the Town Hall on the 4th ult. As a graceful compliment to the memory of our great English composer, the programme was largely made up of works by the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, comprising the Overtures, The Naiades, and the Wood Nymphs. Two movements of the pianoforte Sonata, Joan of Arc, were ably rendered by Mr. Franklin Taylor; and Mr. Vernon Rigby sang "His salvation," from the Woman of Samaria with devotional feeling and artistic power. Miss Fischer was the other vocalist. An important item in the programme was Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," which was well played. Mr. Stockley conducted.——On the 11th ult. Messrs. Harrison gave their fourth and last subscription concert of the season. The artists engaged were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. J. L. Wadmore, Herr Joachim, and Miss Agnes Zimmermann. The great attraction of the evening was the appearance of Herr Joachim, who performed pieces by Mendelssohn and Bach, and took part in a duet by Beethoven, with Miss Zimmermann.

Blackpool.—On the evening of the 18th ult., the Vocal Society gave their last concert of the season. The first part of the programme was devoted to Dr. Bridge's new Oratorio, Mount Moriah. The principals were Miss Clelland, Miss Grindrod, Mr. Ambler and Mr. Lovatt. The performance of the work was highly satisfactory, and called forth much praise from the composer, who conducted. The second part of the programme comprised a miscellaneous selection, the principal items being Handel's chorus "The many rend the skies," and Dr. Bridge's charming part-song, "Flowers." Miss Clelland gave in a most artistic manner, Rode's air with variations, "Al dolce canto," which was enthusiastically encored, and Mr. Ambler received a like compliment for his singing of "Tom Bowling." Mr. Grindrod presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. G. Wrigley, F.C.O., at the harmonium. This concert brings to a close the fifth, and certainly the most successful season of the Society.

Coventry.—On Monday the 8th ult. a pianoforte Recital was given in St. Mary's Hall, by Mr. Arthur Trickett, F.C.O., assisted by Mrs. Hickling and Mr. Heden. Classical music of the highest order was admirably played by Mr. Trickett, who was loudly applauded. Mrs. Hickling, as vocalist, and Mr. Heden, as violinist, performed their parts with great ability, and contributed materially to the success of the entertainment.

Dalkeith (N.B.)—The Choral Union gave an excellent performance of Bennett's May Queen in the White Hart Room on the 16th ult. The principal parts were sustained by members of the Society. The second part, which was miscellaneous, included Chopin's "Fantasia Impromptu," Op. 66, for pianoforte, Bishop's "Allegiance we swear;" Mornington's "Come shepherds, come away;" Barnby's "Wife's Song;" W. Macfarren's "Summer," &c. Mr. Heathcote conducted, and Miss Heathcote acted as pianist and accompanist.

Edinburgh.—Dr. Hans Von Bülow gave a Pianoforte Recital on the 8th ult. in the Music Hall, which was filled in every part. The programme was of the highest class, and well exhibited Dr. Von Bülow's marvellous execution and delicate supple touch. A "Romance" by Professor Oakeley had a very warm reception.——On the 11th ult. Professor Oakeley gave another of his enjoyable Organ Recitals in his Classroom. The whole of the performances were masterly, Bach's Gavotte in particular so delighting the audience that the player had to yield to an encore.——The eighth annual concert of the University Musical Society took place on the 17th ult., in the Music Hall, which was crowded in every part. There were about 200 choristers, present and past students, and two students appeared as solo pianists. The solo vocalists were Mr. Richard Drummond (Hawthornden), and Mr. Makgill. The orchestra comprised forty-six instrumentalists, among whom were some of the principal available professionals in Edinburgh, conducted by Professor Oakeley. A number of part-songs were well sung, and the orchestra played the overtures to Zauberflöte and Egmont, a Symphony in D by Haydn, and the Professor's own Festal March. Mr. Galletly and Mr. Carl Drechsler-Hamilton played two movements of a pianoforte and violin Sonata by C. E. Horsley, and Mr. Coates gave a graceful rendering of "Dans les bois" (Heller). Mr. Adlington presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Kirk at the organ.

Hull.—The Harmonic Society gave a concert on the 5th ult., at which the late Sir William Sterndale Bennett's Cantata, the May Queen, was performed, the principal parts being sustained by Mrs. Poskitt, Mr. R. G. Graves and Mr. Vivian. The second part was miscellaneous, and included several choruses, songs, &c., and two instrumental pieces. Mr. Stephenson conducted.——On the 11th ult., Dr. Hans von Bülow gave a Pianoforte Recital in the Music Hall; the programme included works by Handel, Beethoven, Chopin, Liszt, Bennett, Moscheles, &c.——On the 22nd ult., the members of the Wilson Glee Club gave their first concert. The programme consisted of songs, glees, part-songs, &c., and several encores were awarded during the evening. Mr. Moorby acted as conductor.

Leamington.—On Tuesday evening, the 23rd February, a very successful concert of a miscellaneous character was given in the large upper School-room, Spencer-street, in aid of the funds for purchasing new music for the use of the choir. The Rev. W. J. Woods, B.A., presided, and there was a large attendance. Several songs and duets were well rendered by Miss Hudson, Mr. T. Hudson, Mr. Stone and the Misses Brayne, Hart and Kinton. The anthem, "Behold I bring you good tidings," and some part-songs were exceedingly well sung by the choir. Mr. W. R. Archer, organist, presided at the pianoforte with his usual ability.

Leicester.—The last of five concerts, under the auspices and in connection with the Musical Society, was given on the 15th ult., in the Temperance Hall. Haydn's Oratorio the Creation was excellently performed by a well-balanced band, of between forty and fifty stringed and brass instruments, and a capital chorus furnished by the Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Henry Nicholson. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Mr. Santley. The "Dead March" in Saul was played by the orchestra as a tribute to the memory of the late Sir William Sterndale Bennett.

Liverpool.—The forty-seventh open rehearsal of the Societa Armonica took place at the Mount-street Institute on Saturday, the 13th ult. The performance of the Gade Symphony gave evidence of careful preparation and study, and though the rendering was not absolutely perfect, it was in most respects commendable. The other orchestral items were Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony and the Eli March. The vocalists were Mrs. Wensley and Mr. T. H. Harrison. Mr. Lawson led the band, and Mr. Armstrong conducted.

Lurgan.—A musical entertainment was given in the Town Hall on the 9th ult., by Mr. Gosden, assisted by a few amateur friends. The orchestra performed some favourite Overtures, and Diabelli's duet in D was played by Miss Gosden and Mr. Gosden. Mr. Pentland, Mr. Mathers and Miss Gosden received encores for several of their vocal solos. Mr. Gosden conducted, and accompanied on the pianoforte.

Maidstone.—Sir M. Costa's Eli was produced on the 9th ult. by Mr. Henniker's Choir, under the auspices of the Literary and Mechanics' Institution, in the Corn Exchange. Miss Matilda Scott, Miss A. Newton, Mr. W. Crowe, and Messrs. Rhodes and Christian were the solo vocalists; and the band and chorus of 70 performers were under the direction of Mr. Henniker. Mr. Dutnall presided at the harmonium. The Oratorio was exceedingly well performed.

Redhill.—The choir of the Congregational Church gave its annual Soirée on the 18th ult. There was a small but effective Orchestra, which commenced the programme with Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March, and also played during the evening a March by Mr. J. W. Gritton, and the overture to Figaro. Several songs and choruses were given, among which were the solo and chorus, "O saving victim" (B. Tours), Schubert's Offertorium, "Totus in corde" (Clarionet obbligato, Mr. J. W. Gritton), "My Queen," "The Requital," "To Anthea," and "How lovely are the messengers." Among the instrumental pieces was a Berceuse for piano, clarionet, and violoncello, by Mr. J. W. Gritton, which was much admired, a Fantasia on Masuniello for violin, played by Mr. C. Daws, and a Sonata for violoncello (Marcello) by Mr. P. Daws. Mr. J. W. Gritton conducted.

Runcorn.—On the 4th ult. a concert was given in aid of the funds of the Literary Institute. An efficient choir sang a selection of glees and part-songs which were well rendered. The principal solos were "Lo here the gentle lark,," (Bishop) and "The changed idol," by G. Newcombe, sung by Mrs. Newcombe, "The gift and the giver," and "Jenny at the mill," sung by Miss A. W. James, and "Norah, the pride of Kildare," and "The maid of Llangollen," sung by Mr. G. Barton, of St. Helen's, all of which were encored.

Scarborough.—On the 16th ult. the members of the Scarborough Amateur Vocal and Instrumental Society presented to Dr. Sloman a massive silver salver and silver mounted baton, as a mark of their esteem on his leaving the town. The presentation was made by W. H. Smith, Esq., at the Prince of Wales Hotel, before a large audience, accompanied by a most flattering speech, in testimony of the zeal and ability displayed by Dr. Sloman during the whole of his professional and personal intercourse with the Association. An address from the members was then read by Wm. Drawbridge, Esq., and after a suitable acknowledgment of the gift from Dr. Sloman, the meeting separated.

Sheffield.—The Pye Bank Choral Society gave its first concert on Monday the 1st ult. in the School-room, under the able management of T. B. Woffenden, Esq. The performance consisted of Fawcett's Oratorio Paradise, which was well rendered, and accompanied by an efficient band, under the leadership of J. Cox, Esq. Mr. J. D. Foxon presided at the harmonium. The principal vocalists engaged were Mrs. Parnell, Miss Nichol and Miss Morton. The concert was a decided success.

Shrewsbury.—The fifth of the series of Classical Chamber Concerts took place in the Lion Rooms on the 23rd February, under the conductorship of Mr. J. B. Boucher. Haydn's Trio in D major for violin, piano, and violoncello, was well performed by Messrs. W. Cover, T. Watkis, and J. B. Boucher. Beethoven's Trio, in E flat major for violin, viola, and violoncello, and a descriptive Fantasia, "Fairy Glen" (Davis), first time of performance, were features in the programme. Weber's "Concertstück" for pianoforte, with quartett accompaniment, was played with great force and brilliancy by Miss Davis. Mr. Ffrench Davis played a harp solo, and joined Miss Davis in a duet for harp and pianoforte.

Stafford.—On Thursday the 4th ult., the last of a series of cheap entertainments was given in Rowley-street School-room by the Curate of Christ Church, on behalf of the fund for raising a peal of bells for that place of worship. A very fair programme was provided, and the result was successful. The total sum at present raised by entertainments and private subscriptions amounts to about £55, and the peal of four bells is expected to cost about £170.

"AN OLD SERVANT."—Lovers of justice should send for this Article, and a Catalogue of Musical and Literary Works produced by Dr. Fowle the last twenty years, and judge for themselves why 2,000 persons have signed a Petition to the Premier on his behalf. It is wise to judge of a man's merits by what he has done, and not by any degree he holds, or else many clever musicians who are non-graduates would have no locus standi. Just persons will suspend their judgment respecting an adverse opinion of a musician for whom 2,000 persons by signature have enthusiastically vouched, and Dr. Fowle returns his best thanks for numerous kind letters received, and will send post free the Article and Catalogues on application to him at 1, Eastgate, Winchester. (See Advertisement of the popular "Organist's March.")

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

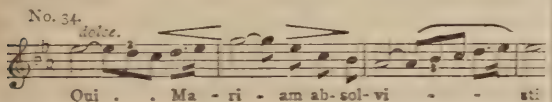
A BRIEF passage in C minor, for tenor solo, makes the verse, "Ingemisco tanquam reus," &c., serve as introduction to an air for the same voice (poco meno mosso—E flat) "Qui Mariam absolvis," &c. The opening phrase of this air furnishes a key to the whole—it is accompanied by the strings in simple fashion :—

No. 34.

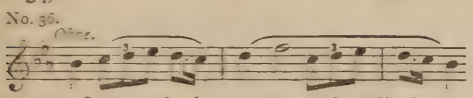


A continuance of the melody introduces a passage of quaver triplets for bassoon, and ends with a half close, immediately upon which the instrument just named has a short phrase :—

No. 35.

suggested by the vocal opening, and now made an important feature. At the words, "Inter oves locum præsta," Verdi adopts the familiar plan of dividing the violins in their highest register while the voice and oboe employ themselves with a theme which also may be said to grow out of that already quoted (No. 34) :—

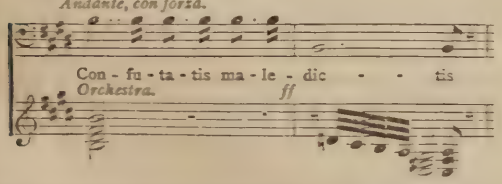
No. 36.



The rest of the solo is constructed well-nigh exclusively from the materials shown. At its close a chromatic scale passage leads from E flat to B natural, upon which note, as the dominant of E major, begins a bass solo (Andante), "Confutatis maledictis." The words of this verse, as need hardly be pointed out, suggest great contrast, and Verdi uses the opportunity well. We recognise him, and remember Rigoletto, as soon as the first two bars are heard :—

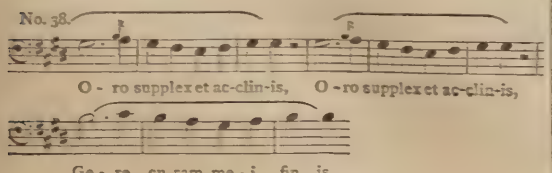
No. 37.

Andante, con forza.



The contrast follows immediately, and is best exemplified in the subjoined gentle phrase, accompanied by strings alone with repeated quavers :—

No. 38.



Subject to some variety of treatment, the "Confutatis" returns, leading now by one of those chromatic scale passages which the composer is fond of using, to a new episode, beginning as shown below, and ending very gracefully in A flat :—

No. 39. espress.

A return is made to the passage quoted in No. 38, after which a Coda serves for a modulation into the key of G, and as a lead to a repetition of the opening movement of the "Dies iræ," which itself conducts, by means of some new matter, to the "Lachrymosa" —a quartet and chorus (Largo—B flat minor). The theme is given out by the mezzo-soprano, accompanied by strings with detached chords, and deserves quotation in full :—

No. 40. Largo, con molto espressione.

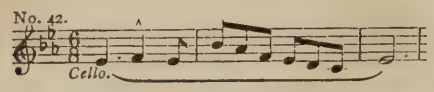
It is next taken up by the bass solo, while the first voice, aided by oboes and clarinets, has a series of detached syncopated notes, piangente, which add much, in a style distinctive of the composer, to the poignant expression of the music. The ensemble following is constructed in masterly fashion and heavily scored, contrasting thus with an episode on the words, "Pie Jesu Domine, Dona eis requiem," written for the solo voices only, and beginning as subjoined :—

No. 41.

A second ensemble follows, also built upon the leading theme (No. 40), but with some novelty of treatment. The Coda deserves particular notice on account of a device which is at once bold and effective. All the voices declaim the final "Dona eis requiem," in monotone on the dominant, while the instruments end a harmonized passage with a full close in the major of the key. But, instead of either of the ordinary cadences on "Amen," we have two chords of G major, after which the full orchestra, pp, returns to the tonic and so concludes.

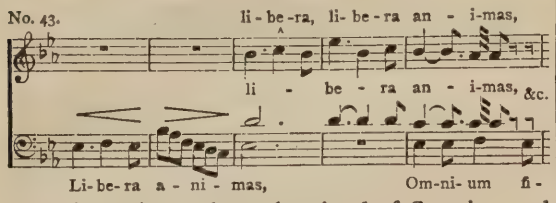
The Offertorio, "Domine Jesu Christe," is set as a quartet (Andante mosso—A flat), and scored for full orchestra, including four bassoons. Solo passages for the celli play a conspicuous part throughout both the orchestral introduction and the brief duet for mezzo-soprano and tenor with which the movement opens. One of these passages announces a theme afterwards to be made important :—

No. 42.



It is with this that the bass voice begins the second section of the movement—a trio in which it is joined by the voices already heard. We have in the opening bars an epitome of the whole:—

No. 43.



The trio section ends on the chord of C major, and now the soprano enters with a long-sustained E natural, accompanied by repeated quavers for the divided violins, while two violins, con sordini, take up the leading theme (No. 42) as thus:—

No. 44. Cantabile.

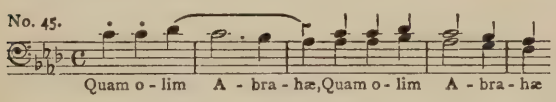
The same phrase is also repeated by the voice. Eventually the other voices join in succession, and soon arrive at a full close, which leads to an Allegro mosso in the same key, "Quam olim Abrahæ," beginning imitatively:—

No. 45.



Nothing in this brief movement calls for particular notice, and we pass on to the "Hostias et preces tibi" (Adagio—C major), which is also given to a quartet. The theme is announced by the tenor, accompanied only by strings, trem.:—

No. 46. Adagio, dolciss.

Out of this passage, and a reply first heard in the form subjoined:—

No. 47.

the Adagio is chiefly constructed. At the close a return is made to A flat, and to the "Quam olim Abrahæ," which, with a slight addition, leads back to the original theme (No. 40), now given to all the voices in unison, and followed by a short Coda.

The "Sanctus," written for a double choir (Allegro—F major), begins with an emphatic exordium upon the dominant and dominant seventh chords, and takes the form of a fugue in eight parts with two subjects—the notes below the vocal staff in the extract following show an orchestral variation of the subordinate theme:—

No. 48. Allegro.

These subjects are ingeniously worked at the outset, but it is not long before the second disappears, and the first comes to be treated more as matter for obvious imitation than fugally. Nevertheless, the music swings along with emphasis till a full close brings us to an extended and beautiful Coda which claims rank among the happiest portions of the work. Its character may be seen at a glance in the following extract:—

No. 49. pp

The antiphon here shown is sustained to the end, the only change made being a larger use of the orchestra in a succession of chromatic scales, respecting the exact value of which, as a means of appropriate effect, different opinions will be entertained.

Among the most original sections of the Mass must be placed the "Agnus Dei," a movement for two sopranos and chorus (Andante—C major). It begins with an extended theme announced by the solo voices in octaves, without accompaniment:—

No. 50. Andante. dolciss.

The chorus and orchestra follow with the same melody, also in octaves, after which it is repeated, in the tonic minor, by the soli, still in octaves, albeit the orchestra employs harmony. Next, the second half of the theme is given in harmony by the chorus, preparatory to the re-entry of the soli with the subject in its original form, but attended now by an orchestral counterpoint of quavers. The second half is again repeated by the chorus, this time in the major, and a short Coda ends the whole. No means could be more simple than these, but we may search long for a corresponding example of their use.

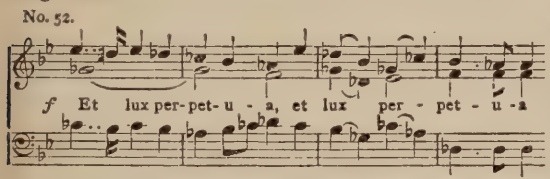
We now arrive at the closing section of the Mass, and find the "Lux eternæ" set as a trio for mezzo-soprano, tenor, and bass. It begins (Molto moderato—B flat) with a declamatory solo for the first-named voice, accompanied by the now familiar tremolo from the strings, and followed by a distinctive phrase for the bass, with a characteristic answer:—

No. 51.

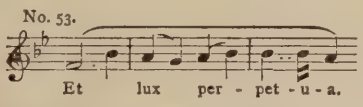
After repetition in a slightly varied form, the voices alone are heard, poco più animato, in a passage beginning thus:—

No. 52.



and ending in G flat major, from which we pass to the original theme in B flat minor, now further varied. A half close introduces a new subject:—

No. 53.



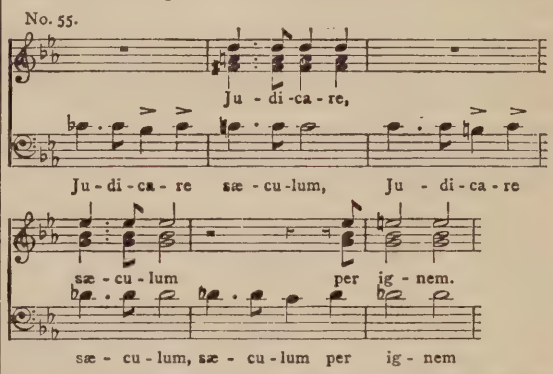
and with this the movement is continued, in a manner that scarcely calls for special remark, till it reaches a tranquil end.

As though to prove that too much could not possibly be done in honour of his illustrious countryman, Verdi does not stop with the Mass, but proceeds to the "Libera me, Domine"—a portion of the Catholic funeral service solemnized immediately around the coffin of the deceased. The prayer to be saved from eternal death takes the form of a soprano solo and chorus (Moderato—C minor), the single voice beginning in monotone and quasi-recitative, echoed by the unaccompanied chorus. This is but an exordium, and now we enter upon an extended solo, of such a character that no extract would serve to give an adequate idea of the whole. Leaving it therefore, to speak for itself in performance we pass on to find the close of the solo followed by another repetition of the Allegro which opened the "Dies iræ." This is given in its complete form, and leads to an Andante in B flat minor, "Requiem æternam," which allots to the voices precisely the music, with some expansion, heard at the beginning of the Mass from the orchestra (see Nos. 2 and 3). The device is a happy one, and secures unity in a most effective way. With this it may be supposed that Verdi ends, as Beethoven closes his Mass in C, but once more the recitative prayer is heard, leading to an Allegro risoluto (C minor), which takes the form of a fugue upon the following subject:—

No. 54.

Verdi works this theme at some length, both in a direct and inverted form, eventually adding a solo soprano to the ensemble, and largely using the first five notes throughout an important Coda, a striking feature of which is an episode on the words "Dum veneris judicare," &c. One passage in this episode deserves to be quoted if not imitated:—

No. 55.



All that follows is very impressive because full of intensest feeling, and after the recitative prayer has once more been heard, responded to by the closing "Libera me" of the chorus, we feel that it may be said respecting Verdi's monument to Manzoni, "Finis coronat opus."

As we anticipated, the Dean and Chapter of Worcester do not find matters progress so smoothly as they expected, in organizing a Musical Festival of their own, in place of that which has been held for so many years. It was at first intended that there should be a Festival of Church Services on two days in September next, in the course of which such works as the Dettingen or Utrecht Te Deum, new services by living English composers, and (in the place of anthems in the afternoon) Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion, or Hymn of Praise, Spohr's Last Judgment, &c., should be introduced, with full choir and orchestra; but to accomplish this a subscription of £700 or £800 was necessary; and, as this modest sum did not appear forthcoming, it seems probable that the idea of an orchestra and full choir will be abandoned, and the Worcester Festival of 1875 dwindle down to a two days' "Service of Song." What possible good this change can effect for the cause of religion, music or charity is known only to the Dean and Chapter and the select few by whom they are supported: neither their motives nor actions are for public discussion, in proof of which we may mention that at the last meeting of this exclusive body reporters for the press were rigidly excluded.

We are glad to aid in giving publicity to a proposal from a correspondent, who signs himself Nathaniel Waterall, but as his letter has already appeared in a contemporary, he can scarcely expect us to insert it in the Musical Times. Could not, he says, a series of Promenade Concerts be given during the Summer in the Horticultural Gardens, South Kensington, on the same plan as those conducted by the late M. Jullien at the Surrey Gardens? The admission, he thinks, should be fixed at a moderate rate (including the fare on the District Railway), so that the scheme may not appeal so much to the aristocratic class as to the masses. The suggestion is no doubt worthy of consideration. We have certainly but few opportunities of enjoying music in the open air; and if we can educate the artistic taste of the people without confining them within four walls, every encouragement should be given to the enterprise. The space available, too, in these beautiful gardens would materially increase the comfort of the visitors; for, although it has not hitherto been considered necessary, we certainly think it important at a "Promenade" concert that you should be able to move.

Mr. J. H. Jennings sends us a programme of first-class sacred music which was advertised to be given on the evening of Good Friday last, at Sanger's National Amphitheatre (late Astley's), the principal vocalists including some of the most eminent members of the profession. The performance, however, was interdicted at the eleventh hour by the Lord Chamberlain, although, as Mr. Jennings states, the Crystal Palace and Albert Hall were open for a performance of similar music, Messrs. Sanger gave an equestrian entertainment at Wormwood Scrubbs, and athletic sports and games took place at Lillie Bridge. A journey to the Crystal Palace is a long and somewhat expensive one from the densely-populated neighbourhood in which Sanger's Amphitheatre is situated; but there were plenty of other "palaces" open without any restriction whatever; and as the Guardian of our Morals evidently thinks that the exciting "entertainment" therein provided is far preferable to that announced by Mr. Jennings, there can be no doubt that those who were tempted into indulging a little too freely at these places of resort must have been much gratified by the knowledge that their Good Friday orgies were "licensed by the Lord Chamberlain."

We are desirous of calling attention to an excellent article in the last number of the New Quarterly Magazine, entitled "Richard Wagner and his Ring of the Niblung," from the pen of Dr. Hueffer. We certainly cannot agree with all that is advanced by the writer in favour of the composer of the future—for instance, where he affirms that the introduction of melodies representing a certain idea or principle in the drama "our art owes to Wagner"—but the subject is so intellectually treated, and so much valuable information is furnished respecting what Dr. Hueffer terms the composer's "last and greatest work," that the paper cannot but prove in the highest degree interesting, more especially as it is now definitely settled that the much talked of "trilogy" is to be produced, under Wagner's own direction, at Bayreuth, in 1876.

In spite of the inexorable demands upon our space, we printed in our last number the whole of the correspondence connected with Dr. Lloyd Fowle, in proof of our desire to do him the fullest justice. This, however, it appears did not satisfy him; and as the letter he addresses to us this month contains no replies to Dr. Stainer's queries, we adhere to our already announced determination not to insert it. We may say, however, that although not furnishing us with the desired information, he expresses his intention of writing a "full statement" of the University at which he graduated, in a Treatise now forthcoming, so that any of our readers who desire it will have an opportunity of satisfying their curiosity on the subject. In our columns the matter has been fully ventilated; and we have therefore suppressed a number of communications, on both sides of the question, which have been forwarded to us. Let us say, however, before taking leave of the question, that referring to Dr. Barry's letter on "Degrees," in our last number—we believe we are correct in affirming that "foreign graduates" in music are unknown, as no foreign University, at least in Europe, grants them—certainly no such honours are conferred by Germany.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

At the Saturday Concert, March 27th, was produced for the first time in public in this country Bach's Cantata, "My spirit was in heaviness." It is described in the programme as one of about 200 pieces of the same nature by this composer, and as having been first performed on the 3rd Sunday after Trinity, 1714, when Bach was twenty-nine years old. Under its original title, "Ich hatte viel Bekümmerniss," and in its original language it has been several times heard in amateur circles in London and elsewhere, and the impression it has always made rendered its production in public inevitable. It is, however, to be wished that the first hearing of works of this class should take place in church, for which they were intended, rather than in a large concert room, which however well adapted for orchestral effects, can scarcely be said to be equally suitably for vocal music. The solo singers were Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Palmer, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Whitney, all of whom were heard to advantage. So much can hardly be said of the choir, whose performance was tolerably correct, but rather wanting in the higher and more intellectual features of chorus singing. Indeed, to be somewhat hypercritical, the rendering was, on the whole, "hard." Bach's music requires a treatment very different from that of most other composers, the harmonies being frequently close and intricate, necessitating a most careful attention to the various gradations of light and shade. In one respect it may be said to resemble that of Schumann and Brahms—or vice versâ—in the obligation it imposes upon each performer to know not only their own part thoroughly but also the parts of all the others, and this can scarcely be said to have been achieved by the executants on the present occasion. Various were the indications of haste in the general get-up of the work, not among the least being the omission of an important air for tenor solo, "Fast my bitter tears are flowing," and the restoration at the last moment of the duet "Come, my Saviour, and restore me," marked in the book of words to be omitted. The remainder of the concert was devoted to a miscellaneous selection, of which may be noticed a rather coarse performance of Macfarren's Overture to "St. John the Baptist;" a highly finished rendering of two movements of the "Lobgesang" Symphony and a somewhat ill-balanced performance of Schubert's "Die Allmacht," arranged for tenor solo, chorus of men's voices, and orchestra, by Franz Liszt. It should be mentioned that the English translation of Bach's Cantata used on this occasion, is the one made for Messrs. Novello by the Rev. J. Troutbeck. Mr. J. F. Barnett's Descriptive Fantasia, "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and Professor Macfarren's Violin Concerto (finely played by Mr. Carrodus) have well represented the English composers, and been warmly welcomed by the critical audience assembled at these performances. At the last concert of the series on the 17th ult., the first portion of Sir Julius Benedict's Symphony—"Moderato," "Allegro" and "Scherzo"—was received with unqualified admiration; and although we could wish that so beautiful a work were not given to us by instalments, there can be no question that such a method of presentation creates an intense longing for the remainder. With the benefit of the indefatigable Conductor, Mr. Manns, which took place on the 24th ult., and at which Dr. Hans von Bülow played Raff's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, the present season terminated.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This establishment opened on the 30th March with an excellent performance of "Guglielmo Tell," Signor Marini more than confirming the position he has already obtained here by his highly dramatic singing in the arduous part of Arnoldo, and Madlle. Bianchi giving at least a careful rendering of the music allotted to Mathilde. The principal event of the month has been the début of Madlle. Zaré Thalberg, as Zerlina, in "Don Giovanni," a part admirably suited for the first appearance of so young a vocalist. That the audience warmly encouraged the new comer, and nerved her to display her best powers was evident from the moment of her entry; and, thus placed in sympathy with her hearers, her natural gifts enabled her to achieve a perfect triumph. Her voice is a pure soprano, equal in every part of the register, and of that silvery quality which, when mellowed by time and experience, cannot fail to place its possessor in the highest rank of operatic vocalists. Her acting, too, is sprightly and vivacious, without a tinge of coarseness; and her finished rendering of "Batti, batti" and "Vedrai Carino" ensured her a solid encore for both these pieces. That her career will be anxiously watched, there can be little doubt, for a more genuine and deserved success we have rarely witnessed. The new tenor, Signor de Sanctis, who made his first appearance as the Duke, in "Un Ballo in Maschera," displayed a good voice, and was received with much favour, especially in the Romanza in the first scene, which was encored. Madlle. Marimon and Madlle. Albani have returned and attracted full houses, many other established favourites having also strengthened the cast of the operas during the month. Wagner's "Lohengrin" is at last we presume to have a hearing, for it is positively announced on Saturday the 8th inst.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Mr. Mapleson seems resolved to support his character as a zealous upholder of high class works, for he opened his season on the 10th ult. with Beethoven's "Fidelio" (Madlle. Tietjens sustaining the part of the heroine with even more than her usual effect), and has definitely announced his intention of devoting an evening in each week to the performance of an Opera by one of the great classical composers. Signor Bignardi, who made his début on the occasion, produced but small effect in the music of Florestan, but it is possible he may do better in parts of less pretension. Madlle. Elena Varesi's performance of Gilda, in "Rigoletto," proved that she possesses a really good voice which has been carefully trained, and there is every reason to believe that she will be a valuable acquisition to the company during the season. The greatest success has been created by Madlle. Anna de Belocca, who comes to us heralded by the highest encomiums from the Continental press. Her singing of the trying part of Rosina, in "Il Barbiere" proved her to be not only an excellent vocalist, but a refined and intellectual actress, and her reception at once evidenced how thoroughly she had won the good opinion of her hearers. As Susanna, in "Le Nozze di Figaro," Madlle. Pernini made a promising appearance, but judgment upon her merits must be deferred until they have been more severely tested. Signor Campanini has already appeared in some of his best parts, and Madlle. Singelli, who made so favourable an impression last season, has returned to the company.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The second concert was given at St. James's Hall on the 12th ult., the principal attraction being Raff's Symphony "Im walde." According to the English titles, the first part is called "Day"—Impressions and feelings; the second part "Twilight"—comprising Dreaming, and Dance of Dryads; and the third part "Night," representing the arrival and departure of the wild hunt with Frau Holle and Wotan, and daybreak. As abstract music there is much to admire in this Symphony. The first movement has many poetical thoughts, and the Scherzo is really beautiful. The last movement is wild enough in all conscience to express the intended subject, but whether it is within the legitimate province of music to describe such scenes is extremely questionable: the "hunt" after the subjects is certainly obvious enough, and the "daybreak" was felt as a welcome relief after the gloom to which the audience had been so long doomed. Much of the instrumentation in this work is both novel and ingenious, the treatment of the violins being in many parts especially happy; but if most of the accepted rules of harmony are to be violated, we at least think that some good results should be obtained. Herr Raff, however, is evidently above criticism, and as this Symphony is marked "Op. 153," we do not imagine it probable that he will now mend his ways. Madlle. Krebs's performance of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor was in every respect excellent, and the singing of Madlle. Johanna Levier was a notable feature in the programme. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted with much ability throughout the evening.

MUSIC IN LEIPSIC.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

At the nineteenth Gewandhaus Concert the yearly production of Beethoven's ninth Symphony took place, but owing doubtless to the absence of Herr Reinecke, the performance was not a great success.

At the last Concert, in addition to the Eroica Symphony and the Athalie Overture, Schumann's "Concert Allegro" was played by the Capellmeister, this being his only appearance this winter as soloist at these Concerts.

The greatest event of the last few months has, however, taken place not in the Concert-room, but in the Theatre. After a lapse of twenty-five years, Schumann's "Genoveva" has again seen the light on the stage. It is indeed curious that this Opera, founded perhaps on the most popular of all German tales and which should thus appeal to the eye and heart of the folk—when perhaps the sublime music would fail to please, should, after its first appearance in 1850 have been totally laid aside until now.

The Opera is written in the so-called "Symphonic" form (as distinguished from the old Italian style), though of course not developed to the extent of Wagner's later or perhaps even earlier works.

At the second Hoffmann Concert, the first act of Die Walküre (Wagner) was given, the orchestral accompaniment being arranged for two pianos. The concert pleased immensely.

Grothe, the blind organist from Dresden, gave a recital at the Nicolai Church, the programme including the introduction to Liszt's "Heilige Elizabeth," and the Prelude and Fugue in G minor (Bach). Herr Riemenschneider, a new composer, assisted by the Gewandhaus orchestra, gave an invitation orchestral concert at which various selections from his compositions were performed, among which were portions of the "Ice-maiden," the "Dance of Death" (a most extraordinarily fantastic production) and an Oyerture to a comedy. The composer's special talent lies more in his orchestration, which was exceedingly good, than in his "form." Frau Riemenschneider sang the various soprano solos.

And now, beyond the Conservatorium Public Examinations, we have nothing to look forward to till next September.

IN the notice of Mr. Henry Leslie's concert, which appeared in our last number, we omitted to state that the pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mr. J. G. Callcott, Mr. J. C. Ward presiding at the organ and harmonium.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given at the Birkbeck Institution on the 14th ult. under the direction of Mr. Stedman. The artists were Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Woodcock, Miss Lucie Hann, Mr. Geo. Fox, Mr. King Hall, and Mr. Henry Parker.

THE prospectus of that excellent and rising Institution, the Welsh Choral Union, announces four concerts during the present season, at St. James's Hall, at the first of which, on the 3rd inst., the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's Cantata, The May Queen, will be performed. Acis and Galatea, and Athalie are also promised in the course of the session. As we mentioned at the time, the expense of "The Welsh Choral Union Scholarship"—founded for the purpose of educating one of the most talented young members of the choir at the Royal Academy of Music, and to which Miss Mary Davies was elected—was generously guaranteed for the first year by the Honorary Conductor, Mr. John Thomas, and it is now announced that Miss Wageman has kindly undertaken to bear the cost of the second year's instruction. The Society has certainly most powerful claims upon the support and patronage of the public; for, in addition to the attractive nature of its concerts, we are told that "any surplus funds will be devoted to the furtherance of Welsh Choral Union Scholarships."

EXCELLENT as are the histrionic powers of Mr. Charles E. Fry—who forwarded us tickets for a "Shaksperian Recital" at the Quebec Institution on the 23rd ult.,—we could scarcely have given him a notice in these columns had he not so woven in some well chosen musical illustrations with his reading as to put in a plea for our support. Mr. Fry's highly dramatic recitation of many of the most effective scenes from Shakspere's plays elicited the warmest and most deserved applause from a large audience; and we can scarcely doubt that, were he so inclined, he might command a legitimate success in an arena which would afford him freer scope for the display of his versatile talents. The musical artists who appeared on the occasion were Mr. E. H. Thorne and Mr. W. H. Thomas (pianoforte), who played four-handed arrangements of Mendelssohn's Overture to the Midsummer Night's Dream, and a selection from Sullivan's Tempest music, and Misses Emily Spiller and Dones, who gave some appropriate vocal pieces, nearly all of which were most enthusiastically encored. The Recital was listened to with the utmost interest throughout.

THE two Pianoforte Recitals given during the past month by Dr. Hans von Bülow, previous to his departure for America, were attended by large and thoroughly appreciative audiences. The programme of the first concert was exclusively devoted to the compositions of Chopin, and the second was miscellaneous, a marked effect being created by his performance of Beethoven's thirty three variations on a waltz by Diabelli.

INTELLIGENCE has reached us of the recent death of Madame Pleyel, who held a high reputation as a refined and intellectual pianist. Her performances were received with the utmost favour in England before the love for classical works had become so general; and we may, therefore, regard her as one of the many pioneers of true art to whose teachings we are so much indebted for the cultivation of a healthy musical taste in this country.

THE artistic world has been shocked during the past month by the intelligence that Herr Joachim, the celebrated violinist, has been bitten by a dog. The wound is however, happily, but slight; and we have every reason to believe that the anxious and widely spread hope for his convalescence will be speedily realised.

A NUMBER of eminent Italian teachers of singing as well as professional vocalists, wishing to render homage to their illustrious countryman, have expressed a desire to take part in the chorus for the forthcoming performances of Signor Verdi's Requiem, and have invited their colleagues to join them in thus testifying their respect for the Maestro.

ON Tuesday the 20th ult., a concert was given by the St. John's Wood and Kilburn Choral Association in the Lecture Hall of the Literary Association, Junction Road, Upper Holloway. The chief feature in the programme was the excellent rendering of Mendelssohn's Loreley, in which Mrs. Sharp well sustained the part of "Leonore." The "Three Chafers" was well sung by Messrs. Simpson, Robertson, Sharp and Nichols, as was also the duet "The Sailor sighs," by Mrs. Sharp and Mr. Baines.

WE are requested to state that the article entitled "Bach in Soho," reprinted in our last number from the Guardian, was from the pen of Mr. John Crowdy, occasional musical critic to that paper.

THE St. Mary's Choral Society, Southwark, in connection with St. Mary's, Old Kent Road, gave a concert in the School-room, Clarence Street, on the 1st ult. The Society, under the excellent guidance of Mr. H. F. Frost, the choir-master at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, has of late made considerable progress. The choruses included the opening of Spohr's Last Judgment, Mendelssohn's "I waited for the Lord," Beethoven's "Hallelujah," and part-music by Bennett, Mendelssohn, and Macfarren. The programme also contained vocal solos by Miss E. Reimar, R.A.M., Miss M. Duval, R.A.M., the Misses E. and H Tedd, and Messrs. Milsom, Gerald Gadsby, and W. Clifford, and pianoforte solos by the conductor. Mrs. Pawsey was an efficient accompanist. The Rev. Wm. Hall, vicar, presided.

IT is with much regret that we record the decease, during the past month, of Mr. Joseph Williams, the celebrated clarionet player, and one of the Directors of the Philharmonic Society. His tone and execution upon the instrument which he had made his especial study brought him very early in life into the highest positions, not only in our best orchestras, but in Her Majesty's private band. A clarionet Concerto by Mr. Williams was an important feature at one of the Hereford Festivals, and he also published an instruction book for the instrument, besides several graceful original melodies. Although in his 80th year at the time of his death, Mr. Williams retained his mental faculties to the last, and his loss will be long felt by the many who enjoyed the privilege of his friendship.

A VERY excellent performance of the Messiah was given at the Bow and Bromley Institute on Good Friday, with band and organ accompaniment. The soloists were Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Bolingbroke (Parepa-Rosa Scholar, R.A.M.), Mr. Dudley Thomas, and Mr. Henry Pope, all of whom performed their parts very satisfactorily. The choruses were exceedingly well sung by the Choir of the Institute and the Stepney Tonic Sol-Fa Prize Choir. The Band was selected from the Crystal Palace Orchestra and the Sacred Harmonic Society: Orchestral Superintendent, Mr. G. Webb; Leader, Mr. S. R. Webb; Trumpet, Mr. Wilmore; Drum, Mr. Archer; Organist, Mr. A. Carder; and Conductor, Mr. W. McNaught.

MISS EDITH MIDDLETON (pupil of Mr. George Forbes) gave a concert at St. George's Hall, on Thursday, the 8th ult. The vocalists were Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Matilda Scott, Mr. Stedman, and Signor Caravoglia. Miss Middleton gave a careful and expressive rendering of the "Moonlight Sonata," and several other pieces, all from memory. A duet with Mr. George Forbes, on two pianos, was a great feature in the concert. Mr. Lazarus (clarionet) and Madlle. Cicely Brousil (violin) were greatly applauded in solos on their respective instruments. Mr. George Forbes conducted.

THE monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union took place on the 2nd ult. The selections for the choir included Mendelssohn's "On a lake" and "In a wood," Weber's "The stars that above us are shining," and Barnby's "Sweet and low," all of which were well sung. Of the solos the most effective were "Should he upbraid," and "O, how delightful," by Miss Janet King; "Thine is my heart" (Schubert), "Maiden thoughts," and "Greeting" (Mendelssohn) by Miss Besley; "What is the spell" (Rooke), by Mr. Theo. Distin; and "Once again," by Mr. C. Strong. Mr. G. F. Smith, R.A.M., played Cwry's "Allegrezza," and was highly efficient in the accompaniments, being assisted by Miss Chapman, R.A.M., Miss A. King, and Miss Shepherd. Mr. Garside conducted.

At the second concert of the British Orchestral Society, on the 31st March, Mr. Alfred Holmes's Symphony in C minor, "Robin Hood," occupied a conspicuous place in the programme, and was received with sufficient favour to make its composer believe that he has fairly taken his place amongst the writers of orchestral "descriptive music," a school of composition evidently alarmingly on the increase. That there are gleams of talent in this work is undeniable; but the want of defined plan, the commonplace nature of the themes, and the absence of colour in the instrumentation produced a sense of weariness in the listener. The best movement is the Serenata, and the worst the Finale; but, throughout the Symphony, as we have already said, there are many points which seem to indicate that, were their author less ambitious, he might be more successful. Mr. Randegger's Scena "Saffo" (finely sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington) is thoroughly dramatic, and full of that truth of expression in every phase of the poetry which might be expected from the composer of "Fridolin." The instrumentation is masterly in the extreme, and although sufficiently independent, never obtrudes itself to the detriment of the vocal part. The applause was as warm as it was well deserved, and Madame Sherrington was enthusiastically recalled to the platform. At the third concert, Spohr's "Power of sound" was well given, and Miss Emma Barnett was highly successful in her interpretation of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat.

The pupils of the North-East London Academy of Music gave their annual concert at the Manor Rooms, Hackney, on Tuesday evening the 30th March. The pupils most worthy of notice were Miss Clements, Miss Hewett, Miss Ellen Smith, Miss Lottie West and Mr. C. E. Smith, pianists; and Miss Cassell, Miss Rogers, Miss Helling, Mr. C. Prickett and Master J. E. West, vocalists.

The 137th Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians took place at Willis's Rooms on the 10th ult., under the presidency of the Right Hon. the Earl Beauchamp. The speeches were unusually good, and the music far above the average at these meetings. Earl Beauchamp, in proposing the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians," took an opportunity of condemning the conduct of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester in refusing to grant the use of the Cathedral for the Three Choir Festivals, an institution which, he said, had existed for 150 years, to the great benefit and advantage of all concerned. Eloquent speeches were made by Professor Macfarren and Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, both of whom paid most feeling tributes to the memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett; and Sir Thomas Gladstone, who proposed the health of the President, alluded in strong terms to the remissness of the Government in not doing more for the encouragement of music in this country. The artists, who volunteered their services on the occasion, were Madlle. Johanna Levier, Madame Poole, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Madlle. Krebs (pianoforte) and Herr Wilhelmj (violin), the vocal music being ably accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. C. E. Stephens. The London Vocal Union (under the direction of Mr. Fred. Walker) also sang several concerted pieces. The subscriptions, which included a donation of 100 guineas from Earl Beauchamp, amounted to nearly £600.

As soon as the idea of founding a Goss scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music became generally known, a liberal response was made to the request for subscriptions, and in a short time the sum of £300 was raised for the intended purpose. The presentation of the trust deed to Sir John Goss took place on the 14th ult., in the Chapter House, St. Paul's, before a large number of members of the profession and others interested in the cause. The service known as "Goss in E," and the anthem "Praise the Lord" (amongst the finest compositions for the Church contributed by Sir John Goss), were excellently rendered at the afternoon service, the prayers being intoned by Canon Milman and the lessons read by Canon Coward. At the meeting the Chair was taken by Mr. John Hullah, in the absence of Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart. M.A. Amongst the letters read was one from Professor Macfarren, on behalf of the Professors and Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music, warmly expressing their sympathy with the occasion. The Chairman then opened the business of the day. He said, it was a pleasant duty to have to present, on behalf of professional and other friends, a testimonial to so good and true a man as Sir John Goss (cheers.) This testimonial was surely suited to the man, for it had taken the most delicate form that could be chosen—a graceful and appropriate presentation. The object of this testimonial would have the pleasure during his life of witnessing its effect in the education of scholars in the path which it was his desire they should pursue (hear, hear). The name of Sir John Goss must awaken in all lovers of music a sentiment of pleasure and gratitude as well as of personal esteem. His high excellence as a musician and composer was admitted on all hands; and it might be said that he had done more than any other Englishman to solve the problem of the reconcilement of modern discovery in the musical art with ecclesiastical expression—a thing that was not to be done by depriving the musician of his instruments over and above the organ (applause.) Such attempts were merely stereotyping ecclesiastical forms; and he (the chairman) should say that there ought to be no new music if a new style were not allowed (hear, hear.) Mr. Hullah strongly protested against the notion of finality as regards the ideas and style of church composition, which he said, should be free in the sense that men who write it should know no prohibitory rules save those laid down by their own religious feeling. Sir John Goss had availed himself of the increasing resources of the time, and enriched sacred art by widening its scope and character. Given musical education and accomplishments, the character of ecclesiastical music depended upon the deep and religious spirit of the composer—as had been exemplified in the music of Sir John Goss. Sir John himself had once been a choir boy. He had been the pupil of Thomas Attwood, who was himself the pupil of Mozart, so that he might claim to be a sort of grandson of the greatest of all musicians (cheers.) He was the composer of orchestral works—in fact, one of the first Englishmen who mastered the orchestra, and had passed on the German tradition into the English school. As a teacher he was to be judged by the excellence of the pupils he had turned out, and by the distinguished position which many of them attained in the musical world; and early in life, too, he had made himself eminent in dramatic music, and would no doubt have then won his way to the foremost rank had he not at an early age abandoned it for a still nobler calling. The scholarship which had been founded in his name would be one of three years (worth at present about £15 yearly) for a choir boy intending to enter the profession receiving instruction for this period at the Royal Academy of Music, taking the organ as his principal study. The deed of gift was then handed to Sir John Goss, who with much earnestness expressed his gratitude for the tribute thus offered to him. Many other speeches followed; and with a proposal of thanks to Mr. Hullah for so ably acting as Chairman on the occasion, the meeting separated. We may mention that the Treasurer or Secretary will still be happy to receive subscriptions in aid of this fund, the sum collected at present being only about half of what is required for the endowment of a full scholarship.

Mr. Donald W. King having sent in his resignation as a professional member of the City Glee Club, the members determined to present him with a mark of their esteem, for his long services to the Club (of which he was one of the founders). A fund was at once collected, amounting to a considerable sum, which is to head a subscription for a more extended and public acknowledgment of that gentleman's long and honourable professional career. A portion of the funds was devoted to the purchase of a very beautiful antique and massive Punch Bowl, which was presented to Mr. King on the last night of the season. Mr. Henry Smith, who was Chairman on the occasion, made an eloquent speech; he alluded to Mr. King's talent as a vocalist, not only in sacred music but as an exponent of Dibdin's songs; and as a proof of his popularity on the English lyrical stage, he mentioned the fact that Mr. King had had the honour of playing Elvino to almost every Amina in the kingdom. He trusted that though Mr. King had resigned his professional connection with the Club, he would often visit it, as it would be a source of deep regret if the Club were never to hear his voice again. The Silver Punch Bowl was handed to Mr. King by another of the founders of the Society, Mr. Bryan Corcoran, amid loud expressions of kindly regard. Mr. King made a very feeling and suitable speech in returning thanks, and said, that having lived through a long professional career, he must now give place to younger artists. A committee will be formed to carry out the further intention of the subscribers.

On Tuesday, the 13th ult., the St. Matthew's Choral Society gave an evening concert in the St. Matthew's Schools, Church-road, Brixton, when "God, Thou art great" (Spohr), "Hear my prayer" (Mendelssohn), and the "Stabat Mater" were performed before a large and appreciative audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Bolingbroke, Mr. Stedman, Mr. J. C. Kneale, and Master Tomey. The accompanists were Mr. G. S. Minson (pianoforte), and Mr. S. Fisher (harmonium). Mr. George Shinn (organist of St. Matthew's Church) conducted. The choruses were, without exception, well sung, the parts being admirably taken up.

The fourth trial of new compositions by the Musical Artists' Society took place at the Royal Academy of Music on the 17th ult., when a highly interesting programme was provided. Amongst the most effective pieces were a well written Duo in G, for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. J. Lea Summers (excellently played by the composer and Mr. G. Palmer) a Sonata in F, for the same instruments, by Mr. E. H. Thorne (in which the composer was ably assisted by Mr. Henry Holmes) and a Duo Concertante, of much merit, by Mr. C. E. Stephens (performed with good effect by Miss Ellen Day and Miss Bolton). A beautiful song "I know my love loves me," by Mrs. R. O'Leary Vinning, received an enthusiastic encore, and several other vocal pieces were warmly applauded. Mr. H. R. Eyers was an efficient conductor.

We understand that a new organ of two manuals, with bourdons, 13 stops, prepared for 18, has been erected in the church of St. Thomas-à-Becket, Canterbury, by J. Grover of the "Hall," Providence Place, Shepherds Bush.

The annual Invitation Concert of the Tufnell Park Amateur Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. H. Thomas, was held on the 15th ult., at the St. George's Church Rooms, Tufnell Park. The first part consisted of Mendelssohn's Athalie, the choruses of which were very effectively rendered by the choir. Mr. Frank Manley ably presided at the pianoforte, and was joined by Mr. Thomas in the Overture and "War March of the Priests," Mr. Thouless assisting at the harmonium. The lyrics were declaimed by Mr. Charles E. Fry with great taste and dramatic power. The second part began with a solo by Mr. Lewis Thomas (Ricci's "Sulla poppa del mio brik"), vociferously encored, and concluded with a very effective performance of Haydn's Spring, Mr. Lewis Thomas singing the "Husbandman's" solo. The remaining solos and concerted music, both in the Spring and Athalie, were taken by members of the choir. The room was crowded by a highly appreciative audience, and Mr. W. H. Thomas may well be congratulated on the result of his efforts.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

A Festival Communion Service, in the key of C, by Thomas Tallis Trimnell.

This work comprises only the Sanctus, the Kyrie, and the Credo. It is correctly written, if we except the resolution of the 7th on G upon the first inversion of C, the bass and upper part both descending to E, page 6, score 3, bars 3 and 4, and few indeed are the compositions of its length that do not present greater faults for the finding. We would rather that the keys of C and A minor had been less confused than they sometimes are by the employment of a chord of E major, where the foregoing and subsequent matter are both in the key of C. This is a slip, not rarely to be found, which results from a longing for the brilliancy of the chord of E, while the writer's attention is fastened to this one harmony, without consideration of passed and future relationship. The best incident in the work occurs in the Credo, on the word "Jesus," where the first inversion of a chord of B is brought in, after a chord of C, with great brilliancy and some newness of effect.

The Office of Holy Communion, comprising Kyrie Eleison, Credo, Sanctus, Hymn, Adoro Te, and Gloria in Excelsis. Set to simple music by Charles H. Wykes.

This, as its title shows, comprehends more pieces than does the setting just noticed, and they are disposed in the order of the Prayer Book, instead of having the Sanctus transplanted to the beginning to form an Introit. The music is as it professes to be, of a most simple character, and very much of it consists of chanting. It is chiefly written injudiciously low for boys' voices, which sound coarse on notes below the staff, and are incapacitated, by the long use of these notes from producing with good effect the high F sharp, which also is employed. The author never ventures into deep waters, but yet loses his balance when he writes two 5ths between tenor and treble at the words in the Credo, "according to the Scriptures." The most musical portion of the whole, is at "O Lord, the only begotten Son" in the Gloria in Excelsis.

"The Lord is full of compassion." Anthem, by John Hopkins.

The organist of Rochester Cathedral naturally emulates the success of his brother, who presides over the music in the Temple Church, and of his late cousin and namesake, who preceded him in his office and subsequently held a like post in Cambridge. Applauding his obvious ambition to support the family claims to musical distinction, we cannot, from the specimen before us of his productive ability, admit that he has yet struck the mark which has yielded many prizes to those of his name. The anthem is somewhat dull in effect, which mainly arises from its being written so low for all the voices, especially the treble, as to exclude or rarely use their best notes, and to bring their weakest or coarsest into constant and prominent employment. The effect results partly also from the want of variety in the part-writing, all the voices moving mostly together with note against note, and the four parts being ceaselessly maintained, save only in the passages for a single voice. Too much value can scarcely be ascribed to the occasional resting of one, two, or three of the parts, as a means of brightening the full harmony when it is resumed, and of giving special interest, both with singers and listeners, to the part that is left alone. But one thing is more beautiful than full four-part harmony, and that one thing is the sometimes entire absence of harmony, or the accompaniment of one part with a counterpoint in notes of different value constituting a totally different character. The anthem is not quite free from technical slips—the consecutive 7ths $\frac{A}{B}\frac{G}{A}$ in bar 3, score 4, page 6, and the leap from the bass of a second inversion, page 11, score 3, bars 2 and 3, for instance; but far worse faults than these would be forgiven, for the sake of greater vitality in the musical ideas. The piece consists of a choral movement in C, successive solos for tenor in E minor, and for bass in C, and a final chorus interspersed with solos in G, which last might be extracted for separate performance.

The God of Love my Shepherd is. George Herbert's 23rd Psalm. Sacred Song. Composed by Ridley Prentice.

Mr. Prentice has set this Psalm with a calm and devotional feeling much to his credit. It is difficult to write sacred music that will live beyond the hour; but the words usually go so far towards the expression of the sentiment, that a mere succession of carefully harmonised notes will often deceive composers into a belief that they have successfully accomplished a task which in truth should be entrusted only to the highest order of genius. If, therefore, we affirm that, much as we admire Mr. Prentice's musician-like treatment of his themes, we fail to discover an original vein of thought, we are only saying what might be fairly advanced against more than half of the music to religious words which daily comes before us. The change to the tonic minor, on the words "Or if I stray" is extremely effective, and the return to the major is also in sympathy with the text; but after the close on the dominant, we do not think the scale passage in the bass at all in accordance with the character of the composition. The final phrase, to the words of the title of the song, descending and concluding on the fifth of the key-note harmony, is a point worthy of commendation.

A Farewell Ode, on the retirement of the Rev. F. Fanshawe, M.A., from the Head Mastership of Bedford Grammar School. Words by the Rev. C. G. Wilkinson. Music composed by P. H. Diemer.

As a general rule, we do not consider it good policy to subject occasional works to the criticism of those who are entirely removed from any sympathy with the circumstances under which they were composed. Birth-day and Wedding Odes, for instance, must of course be written; and we can quite understand that they will be received with acclamation by the admirers of the heroes of the hour; but it is a very different thing when the reviewer—perhaps hundreds of miles away from the place in which they were first performed—is called upon to give an opinion upon these compositions from a strictly musical point of view. Mr. Diemer's "Farewell Ode" does not shake us in our belief of the truth of this assertion. The first chorus is extremely commonplace, and the solo which follows (available for either a tenor or treble voice), although vocal and melodious, contains nothing to arrest the attention of the listener. There is character in the next chorus; and the Quartett, "Farewell" contains some good writing. We presume that Mr. Diemer is aware of the fact of the subject of his "Fughetta" being identical with that of the well-known Canon "Non nobis Domine;" but it makes a good climax to the Cantata, which, as we have already hinted, is likely to prove most successful when given in the neighbourhood of Bedford Grammar School.

At Eventide. Four-part Song. Words from "The Family Herald." The music composed and dedicated to the Stockport Vocal Union, by Jos. Bradley, F.C,O.

WE have on several occasions, in reviewing modern Part-songs, expressed our conviction that for those who can write smooth four-part harmony, it is about the easiest form of choral work; and moreover, supposing it is well sung, that a very large amount of effect can be obtained by a very small expenditure of means, on the part either of the composer or the excutants. "Eventide" has many good points, and may serve as a favourable specimen of Mr. Bradley's facility in the production of this species of composition; but we see no indication of the power to throw any special interest in the work; and whilst, therefore, expressing satisfaction at the purity of the vocal writing, we can scarcely imagine that the song will do more than pass with credit in the crowd.

The Young Organist, a collection of pieces of moderate difficulty, transcribed for the Organ, by W. J. Westbrook. Nos. 14 and 15.

THE pieces in these two Numbers are chosen from sacred and secular sources, those from the latter being happily likely to conjure up thoughts, wherever heard, of home and its influences. There is a pleasant specimen of the talent of Charles Wesley, who was uncle of the present eminent organist of Gloucester, and was organist of Marylebone Church in the Marylebone-road when it was first opened, in the Pastorale from one of his Voluntaries. For how much of the organ distribution the author and the editor are respectively responsible may not be surmised; but it is not a good effect, whoever devised it, to double the bass part with the pedals, an 8th below the left hand, so as to have the passage sounding in three several octaves, which is here conspicuous. A short Anthem by Attwood and an Introit by J. B. Calkin are harmonious in character and nicely arranged. A Melody with one of its variations, from a pianoforte piece by C. M. von Weber, follows. An Abendlied by F. Spindler is divertingly overmarked with lines to indicate the progression of the parts, which, if they succeed in diverting the reader's attention from the successions of 8ths and 5ths, cannot disguise their effect to the hearer. The charming Allegretto in E, from the Nuits Blanches, by Stephen Heller, comes out well in its translation for the organ. A Song of Sacrifice, by Beethoven, is welcome as a little known specimen of the master. A delicious movement from Schumann's Album für die Jugend is welcome as one of the best known pieces in that delightful work. This is followed by the "Hosanna," from Macfarren's 52 Introits. One of Beethoven's settings of the poems of Gellert, "The praise of God," will be another novelty to many who hear it. Mendelssohn's charming songs without words in E is far more appropriate to the organ than it is to Lyte's poem, "Abide with me," to which it has been irreverently adapted—fitted we cannot say—and is sometimes sung. The last piece is a Prelude and Fugue by Dr. Maurice Greene, the venerated Cathedral composer, which is not a most favourable specimen of his power. The reprinting of this with one flat too little in the signature, according to a custom that is fortunately obsolete, is as injudicious as it would be to republish Shakspere with the antiquated orthography; it perplexes the reader who is accustomed to forms now in use, and, if we mistake not, may have misled the editor to omit or to insert some accidentals where the propriety of D natural or D flat is doubtful. The practical difficulty of all these arrangements is within the reach of every player of moderate attainments.

Organ Pieces for Church use. Sets 1 and 2, by Boyton Smith.

THESE pieces show the author to be a strong admirer of M. Gounod, or of the style of harmony, at least, which that composer has brought into great fashion with our young musicians. A sweetness of sound prevails in them, which, if it cloy some ears, is most tasteful to others; and from this we argue a warm reception to the music of Mr. Boyton Smith from a large circle of players and hearers. We cannot greatly praise the compositions for the interest or for the striking character of their ideas. The first series opens with a "Pastorale," in which one progression, of unluckily more than one occurrence, disturbs the generally honeyed manner of the whole, where the upper melody has G F D, while an under part holds ♯G, both being approached from A; the difficulty of reading this un-euphonious progression would be far lessened were the chromatic note called by its true name of ♭A. Then there is an "Andante," which flows smoothly throughout. After this comes a "three-part melody," the title at least of which is a puzzle to the curious, since a melody is what may be presented in one single part, and the combination of three melodies constitutes harmony; it is, however, a very pleasing little piece of music, less semitonic than some of the others, and charmingly melodious in all its three parts. There follows a "Subject from Heller (harmonized and arranged as an Introductory Voluntary)" which is the piece in A, one of the delicious pianoforte trifles known under the collective name of we believe, "Nuits Blanches," with luckily no deviation from the original harmony, but with a new distribution of this to fit it better for the organ, and with an added prolongation of the close; it will agreeably remind the hearer of drawing-room associations, and of the delightful wanderings of Stephen Heller's thoughts during his "Sleepless Nights." The first piece in the second set, "Cantabile," has less of a vocal character than others, depending more on the accompaniment than on the top part for its interest. The "Communion" is tuneful, and one of the most attractive of the whole. A "Prelude" concludes the series, and will leave those, who relish its style, with a wish for the third and fourth sets, which are promised on the wrapper.

Offertoire in D for the Organ. Composed by Oliver A. King.

HERE is, if not an imitation of the successful pieces by Lefebure-Wely that have the same French definition, a composition after their kind and entirely in their manner. English writers—more, it must be owned, than English players—aim generally, in music for the organ, at a more serious style than marks the piece before us; but, if extreme lightness as well as secularity of manner, be appropriable to the instrument, there is no reason why organists should not receive it with as kind a welcome from a native as from a foreign author. The Offertoire (whatever the term may mean) is perhaps a little lengthy; the matter, for instance, that precedes the second subject in A, might have been judiciously condensed when it occurs prior to the return, in the key of D, of the same second subject. The successive chords of diminished 7th, on ♯C and ♯D, p. 2, score 1, follow not with euphonious effect; but then the creed is very general, how unsound soever its basis, that chords of the diminished 7th have a special licence which supersedes all rule and right. The music is far from unmelodious, nay, it is somewhat affluent in ideas, and the effects for the instrument are most brilliant.

Air Varied, for the Organ. By Henry Hiles, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

A GRACEFUL melody in F, with a Variation in the same key, another Variation in F minor, and a third which is followed by a coda in the major key; this little piece displays musicianship and fancy. It will form a capital organ study, firstly, for quickly changing the stops without interrupting the music, and secondly, for transferring the hands from manual to manual and crossing either above or below the other. To our taste, its effects are fitter for the pianoforte than for the instrument for which they are intended; sustained notes are, we hold, the staple of organ writing, deviations from which, however frequent, are exceptional; the removal of the finger for a semiquaver rest after a semiquaver slurred from a quaver, may improve the touch of the pianist more than advance qualities necessary for the organ, and in such points of mechanism the piece abounds.

A Festival March, for the Organ. By Henry Hiles, Mus Doc., Oxon.

MENDELSSOHN has much to answer for, and still more has he who first arranged for the organ the Marches in Athalie and A Midsummer Night's Dream, for to those two men and these two marches are entirely due a host of organisms of various merit, that would never have come into being but for the precedents afore-named. This, by Dr. Hiles, has all the characteristics of its numerous class, its pointed rhythm, its two Trios respectively in F and in A flat, its brilliant emulation of orchestral effects, and its demands on a light free touch, but it is an aristocrat among the million, one of the high-born few, which, while constructed of the same elements as their fellows, are fellows to them in nothing else, being "pieces of quality," because they possess the qualities that mark musicianship if not invention.

Rose-Marie. Song. Words by F. E. Weatherley. Composed by J. L. Molloy.

THERE is always tune in the vocal music of this composer, and were there nothing else, the popularity he has gained might be very easily accounted for; but there is something else, for although but little is ever attempted beyond heightening his melodies with appropriate and natural harmony, that little is carefully and conscientiously done, and the result is that his songs are ever listened to with pleasure. The present one is no exception to the rule: a peculiar effect is gained by allowing the bass to flow down with the voice part, but we do not dislike it, although we should certainly have been better pleased if it had not been continued in all three verses. Both words and music will gratify those who do not despise a simple ballad, and we have little doubt that the song will become a favourite.

The Childwall March, for the Pianoforte. By Frederick H. Burstall.

THIS March was composed on the occasion of the visit to Liverpool of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, to lay the foundation stone of the "Walker Art Gallery," and, as organist of Childwall Parish Church, Mr. Burstall might reasonably suppose that some piece commemorative of the event would be expected of him. Being an occasional composition, it has no right to be reviewed too critically; but we cannot help once more noticing the thoroughly conventional manner in which all these "Marches" are put together. Only recently, in reviewing a similar composition, we spoke of the usual "bold opening, the trio in the subdominant, with the intervening triplets in the accompaniment," and in this March we have all these characteristics repeated. As a musicianlike work, however, we have nothing whatever to say against it. The subjects are well marked and most carefully harmonised, the return to the original theme being extremely effective; but we firmly believe that if composers were to rely less upon their recollection, we might have results which can scarcely be expected whilst "music-making" satisfies both the manufacturer and the purchaser.

LAMBORN COCK.

Impromptu, for the Pianoforte. Composed, and dedicated to Sir John Goss, by Westley Richards.

MR. RICHARDS is advancing in the right road. We have before noticed some compositions of his which show not only much artistic power, but a commendable desire to be ranked amongst the artistic rather than the mercantile class of English composers, and he has a right therefore to expect a helping hand in his progress. His "Impromptu" is extremely well written; and although the frequent occurrence of the principal theme makes the composition somewhat monotonous, much judgment is shown in the method of its treatment. The second subject (if so it may be called) is melodious, and the coda of the piece grows naturally from the leading idea.

Ad Chloen. Ode by Horace. The music, with Latin text, by Charles Salaman.

THAT the result has amply justified Mr. Salaman in his ambitious attempt to give a musical setting to this Ode will scarcely be doubted by any who can enter into the feeling of Horace's poetry. The true expression of the character of each verse, rather than that mere word-painting which too many of our modern composers aim at, has been the evident design throughout the composition; and we cannot too much commend the felicitous manner in which this design has been carried out. The flowing arpeggio accompaniment to the opening and closing lines contrasts well with the triplets to the long-drawn notes of the second verse; and the happy phrases which are wedded to the Latin text may, we hope, induce vocalists to prefer the original words to Lord Lytton's metrical English translation (beautiful as it is) to which the music is also published.

WEEKES AND CO.

Two Pieces for the Pianoforte. By F. W. Hird. No. 1. Alla Marcia. No. 2. Valse.

MR. HIRD has produced two good teaching pieces, and as he dedicates them "to his pupils at Bramham College," we presume that he has achieved all he aimed at. The March is bold, and written with a fair knowledge of effect; but when we say that it is fashioned on a pattern which by this time we have almost become wearied of, there can be little doubt that we express not the sentiments of many who will purchase and play through a composition which does infinite credit to its author as a musician. We like the Waltz better: the themes are more unconventional than those in the first piece; and indeed the melodious character of them might even justify the composer in following the taste of the day by giving some fantastic title to the little sketch, instead of calling it plainly a "Valse." A good effect is gained by the bound chord on the last division of the bar in the first subject. Where it changes into the subdominant, too, the figure in the left hand is a commendable attempt to escape from commonplace, although some of the appoggiaturas sound rather harsh with the melody. The part, however, which we really do not like in the piece is the abrupt modulation on page 6, where, after the chord of A major, we have the chord of the 6th on F♮, followed by a minor 7th on the same note, which, by an enharmonic change, takes us back to the key we have left, the only question being, when we get there, what we ever went away for.

Gigue Moderne, en Sol; par Berthold Tours.

The "Gigue" has scarcely been so much worked by modern composers as the Gavotte, Bourrée, and other dances of the olden time; and Mr. Tours, in the publication of the piece before us, appeals therefore to a large class of music-lovers who desire to multiply their examples of this species of composition. The principal theme is melodious and vivacious, and there is good contrast of character in the flowing phrases, with arpeggio accompaniment, which occur throughout. The harmonies are extremely appropriate; and although the passages are brilliant and effective, the piece is by no means difficult. We conscientiously recommend this Gigue as an excellent trifle, both for practice and performance.

The Cambridge Concert Studies, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Horton C. Allison.

The first of these studies—a Canon in A—is a good specimen of contrapuntal workmanship, but the subject is scarcely attractive enough to justify its title—"Mountain Echoes." The Fugue which follows—"L'Allegro"—we infinitely prefer: the theme is well suited for fugal treatment, and the parts flow smoothly and effectively. The Double Fugue, "Il Pensieroso," is somewhat more laboured in the writing, but the piece shows that the composer has studied in a good school. These studies have been played by Mr. Allison both in England and Germany; and are merely identified with "Cambridge" in consequence of their dedication (by permission) to the late Sir Sterndale Bennett.

Schott and Co.

Duo Brillant à quatre mains, pour le Piano, par Charles Edward Stephens.

Amongst the mass of pianoforte music published in this country it is astonishing how rarely we find a Duet—not a showy operatic Fantasia "arranged for two performers"—but a genuine pianoforte Duet. Whether it is because there are no composers to write them, or no public to buy them we cannot say, but the fact is undeniable; and Mr. Stephens may congratulate himself, not only upon supplying a want, but upon adding to his fame by so doing. There is such evidence of good solid writing throughout this piece that we should be glad if we could call the attention of teachers to its merits as a valuable study for advanced pupils, as well as an effective duet for performance. The flowing subject which pervades the first movement requires to be well woven in with the accompanying passages by both players; but any practice it may demand will be amply repaid by the result. The "Andante Mesto," in the tonic minor, with its three "Paraphrases," is perhaps somewhat dry, but the contrasts are well preserved, and the care of the part-writing will excite interest with the professor, if not with the amateur. The last movement starts with a light and playful theme, and has an exceedingly pleasing and melodious second subject, which is afterwards effectively given to the Secondo, with a graceful descending semiquaver passage for the first player. Those who are delighted with natural and unforced harmonies will be especially pleased with the legitimate manner in which Mr. Stephens gets his effects of colouring. The composition is evidently the work of a trained musician and an original thinker.

E. C. Boosey and Co.

The Changed Idol. Song. Words by Miss Alice Forrest. Composed by G. Newcombe.

There is much musical feeling in this song, but the harmonies are somewhat crude in parts, as if the composer were rather feeling his way in colouring his melody, than seizing upon the chords which should seem spontaneously to grow from it. As instances of awkward progressions, we may cite the passage on page 3, in B minor, which beginning upon a 6.4, proceeds, by the most extraordinary succession of chords upon F♮ and F♯ alternately, to a dominant harmony, upon which the voice-part temporarily reposes; and we must also mention the series of consecutive fifths (bar 4, page 5) which, by a little management, might easily have been avoided. The varied accompaniment will give effect to the voice-part, provided the pianist and singer sufficiently sympathise with each other; and the song will no doubt be successful with listeners who are not as particular as ourselves.

Ransford and Son.

Our Song; the Compass, Book and Square. Written by Francis Bennoch, Esq., F.S.A.

Do I not love? Song. Words Anon. Composed by Donald W. King.

In both these songs we find a decided vein of melody; but the attempt to make the accompaniment an independent part has occasionally caused some awkward effects, which we cannot but believe that the singer will revolt against. The first song has many good points, and there is a quaintness about the entire composition which should ensure its popularity at Masonic Festivals. Musically speaking, "Do I not love?" is, however, the better of the two; the theme is extremely vocal, and it is generally effectively harmonised. Opinions are divided on the notation of many chords; but if Mr. King believe that in bar 1, page 4, C double sharp should be written, instead of D natural, it should certainly have been continued throughout the arpeggio. We need scarcely say that, being composed by so experienced a vocalist as Mr. Donald King, the voice-parts in both songs are most carefully considered.

Transcriptions Classiques. Morceaux de Concours, pour le Piano, par Ch. Neustedt.

Only three of the six numbers already published in this series have been sent to us for notice; but we presume that they may be accepted as fair specimens of the entire set. Why No. 2 should be called "Sonatine de Beethoven; op. 6," considering that it is the last movement of the well-known Duet in D, arranged as a Solo, we cannot conceive. It is true that musicians are aware of this, but students are not; and seeing that the title-page informs them that it is a "Sonatine," and says nothing about its being originally written for four hands, many young players will receive a wrong impression regarding the composition which it may take years to remove. The other numbers are "La Romanesca; Air de Danse du XVIe Siècle," and the "Allegretto un poco Agitato" from Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang." All the pieces are carefully transcribed, lie well under the hand, and will be found extremely useful for teaching.

Three Classical Duets, from Haydn's Celebrated Overture in D. Arranged by John Pridham.

Such arrangements as these are always welcome, for they inculcate a knowledge of classical works at a stage of progress when the taste of pupils is forming for better or worse. The three movements, "Andantino," "Allegro con spirito," and "Minuetto and Trio," are exceedingly attractive to young players; and the fact of the "Secondo" not being a mere accompaniment to the "Primo" should strongly recommend them to teachers. The "Allegro con spirito" must, we think, become an extremely popular number.

Moffat, Paige and Co.

A First Book on the Theory of Music, for the use of the Plymouth High School for Girls. By Louisa Gibson.

This is one of the clearest little books on the rudiments of music that we have seen for some time. The author, instead of copying from the many Treatises on the subject which have for several years been held up as "invaluable to teachers," appears to have taken the liberty to think for herself, and in most cases, we can positively affirm, has thought correctly. Let us at once say however,—to dismiss any possible objection that we can advance as to the general arrangement of the work—that we do not agree with the assertion, at page 49, that "the signature indicates the key in which a piece of music is written." The signature indicates that the composition is in one of two keys—major or minor—but the music alone decides what that key is. We are aware that this is the conventional method of teaching; but false notions on this important subject are thus inculcated which we know, by experience, it takes years to eradicate. All the explanations are (with this solitary exception) excellent, the Chapter on Time especially: indeed it is quite refreshing to read the truth that in 6-8 time "each bar contains two dotted crotchets."

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MEDDLING WITH THE OLD MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—An "Old Subscriber" deserves my best thanks for explaining what I attributed to the changing mania of some modern meddler. Beethoven's own words settle the matter of course; unfortunately I find the question only half solved, because it is not stated whether the bar marked * is to be admitted also, in case the prolongation of rhythm is to be taken out. Perhaps an "old subscriber" would be able to explain why there exists such an important difference in the following passage from Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 81, as printed in an old French edition (Launer, Paris)—

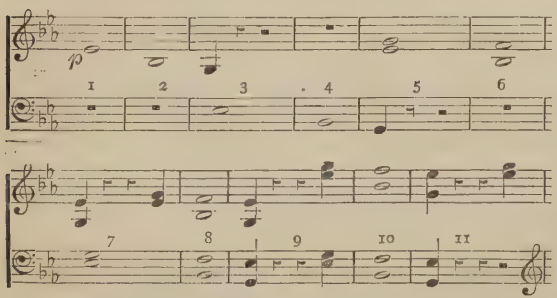
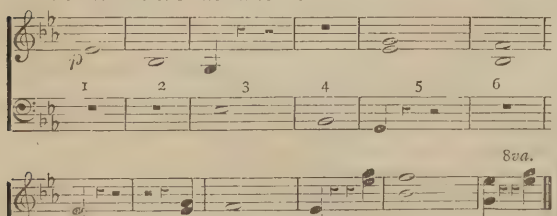
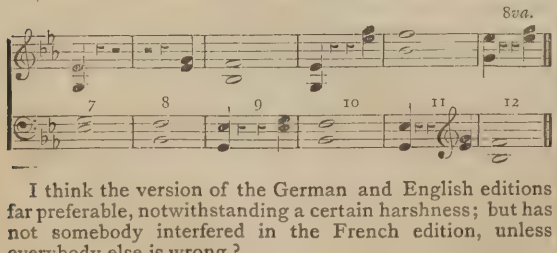
Launer's edition.



All other editions known to me.





I think the version of the German and English editions far preferable, notwithstanding a certain harshness; but has not somebody interfered in the French edition, unless everybody else is wrong?

I am, Sir, yours truly,

April 2, 1875. Allegro.

MR. LANGDON COLBORNE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Allow me to correct a mis-statement which appears in your last number. After reviewing a Te Deum by Langdon Colborne, Mus. Bac., Cantab., you add, "The work is dedicated to the Warden and Fellows of Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's College at Tenbury, where the author is highly distinguished as organist." Mr. Colborne, I believe, left St. Michael's College about July, 1874.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Alfred Alexander,
Organist of St. Michael's College, Tenbury.

A Correspondent protests against a statement in the review, in our issue for April, of Mr. James Shaw's Evening Service. Literally, he proves his point; the reviewer therefore apologises for an exaggerated expression. It must be urged, however, that, though there is a momentary return, in two places, to the original key of the piece, there is too little of this, and too much of other keys, for good effect in the composition. The work is clever, but it fails in point of construction.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Bedford.—The first concert of the ninth season of the Amateur Musical Society took place on Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., in the New Corn Exchange. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was performed in a highly creditable manner. The choruses were sung throughout with great effect, and the Symphony was the most perfect instrumental performance ever given by the Society. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Raynham, and Miss Dora Crofts sang with Miss Wynne in the duet. The second part of the programme included the March from Athalie, "I will extol Thee" (Costa), encored, "My heart ever faithful" (Bach), and Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," finely sung by the choir. Mr. P. H. Diemer conducted.

Birmingham.—A lecture was delivered on Monday the 19th ult., by Mr. A. D. Coleridge, M.A., at Adams and Beresford's Rooms, Ann-street, on "The Life and Times of Sebastian Bach." In commencing, the lecturer said that, like Newton, Bach was a mighty discoverer; like Newton, he believed himself to be God's instrument, and therefore he was very callous to human praise. He was greatly in advance of his time, and the world was now only just beginning to understand him. Of course no sensible man would wish to ignore the greatness of the predecessors of Bach and Handel, but they must date the rise of the golden age of music from the days of those two men. He then referred to the peculiarities and differences in the style of the compositions of the two great masters, dwelling at considerable length upon the profound scholastic acquirements of Bach, and characterising his fugues and scores as being most wonderful. Passing on, the lecturer gave a few incidents of the life of Bach, pointing out that he was born in humble circumstances, lived in a state of poverty, became blind in his old age, and finally had a pauper's funeral. The following passage now appeared in the records at St. Thomas's, Leipsic:—"A man, age 67, J. S. Bach, musical director and singing master of St. Thomas's School, was carried to his grave in a hearse, July 30th, 1750." The well chosen selections were given under the direction of Mr. Chas. Lunn, with Mr. S. S. Stratton at the pianoforte.

BLANDFORD.—Haydn's Oratorio, the Creation, was performed at the Corn Exchange on the 1st ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott (soprano), Mr. Hanson (tenor), and Mr. H. Cross (bass). The principal instrumentalists were Mr. Charles Fletcher (solo violinist), Miss Clara Rossiter (piano), and Mrs. Edwards (harmonium). Mr. Whitehead Smith, organist of Wimborne Minster, was the conductor, and the choruses were well given by the Blandford Choral Society.——ON the evening of the same day a concert, consisting of selections from the Oratorio and secular music was given. Mr. Fletcher played a violin solo, "Air Hongrois," by Brahms, which was enthusiastically encored, and Miss Scott sang "'Twas within a mile o' Edinboro' town," which was also redemanded. Two part-songs, "The lullaby of life," by Leslie, and "A Spring song," by Pinsuti, were sung by the members of the Society, and the concert, under the able conductorship of Mr. Whitehead Smith, was a great success.

BOXFORD.—An excellent amateur concert was given by the choir of St. Mary's on the 20th ult., in aid of the fund for the completion of the organ newly erected by Messrs. Hill and Son. The performance of the choir showed a marked improvement, and the singing of Miss Earee was highly successful. Miss Beatrice Byng, the Rector's daughter, presided at the pianoforte as accompanist. The concert was under the direction of Mr. Martin S. Skeffington, hon. organist, St. Barnabas, Kensington.

BRADFORD.—The Amateur Vocal Union gave a concert in the Church Institute on the 20th ult., in aid of the Manningham Orphanage. The Union, under the able conductorship of Mr. F. C. Atkinson, Mus. Bac., Cantab., has attained an efficiency rarely to be met with in an amateur society. The concert commenced with Mendelssohn's Ninety-fifth Psalm. Mr. Unna sustained the tenor part. Mrs. Unna and Miss Duckitt showed great taste in their rendering of the duet. Bennett's quartett, "God is a Spirit," and the double quartett from Elijah, "For He shall give His angels," were well sung. Smart's part-song, "Stars of the summer night," was fully deserving of the applause which was bestowed upon it, but Mendelssohn's "Praise of Spring," was the gem of the evening.

BRISBANE.—The last concert of the second season of the Musical Union was given on the 6th of January, at the School of Arts, the Messiah being the Oratorio chosen. The solos were, as a whole, a great improvement on previous concerts. The choruses were rendered in a very creditable manner, the accompaniments being given by the orchestra with a crispness and delicacy considerably in advance of past performances. The recitative, "Comfort ye," and the air, "Every valley," were sung in admirable style by a new tenor, who will prove a great acquisition to the Society.

BRISTOL.—A very successful concert was given at the Athenæum Hall, on the 6th ult., by the St. Peter's Church Choir, under the direction of Mr. Alfred Brookes, organist. The great attraction of the programme was the production of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's dramatic Cantata, On Shore and Sea; solo vocalists: Miss Pennington (Mrs. W. Quick) and Mr. Kidner (tenor). The careful training the choir had undergone was shown in the able interpretation given to the many and difficult choruses. Miss Pennington and Mr. Kidner gained a fair share of applause. Herr Janeck played the accompaniments in excellent style. The remainder of the programme was composed of glees and part-songs, with solos for pianoforte, by Herr Janeck, who with Mr. Pomeroy (violoncello) also gave a couple of Sonatas. Miss Pennington, Mr. H. J. Dyer, and Mr. Kidner contributed songs, &c.

BURSLEM.—Mr. Arthur Crook, organist of St. Giles, Newcastle-under-Lyne, has given a series of organ recitals (varied with vocal music) during the winter months at the Town Hall, at which selections from the compositions of Bach, Mendelssohn, Smart, Batiste, and Wely, and arrangements from the works of Handel, Beethoven, &c., have been performed.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—A concert in aid of funds for the erection of a new organ was given by the choir of St. John's Church, on Tuesday in Easter week, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Thomas Smith. The choir was assisted by the Rev. E. H. and Mrs. Littlewood, and Mrs. Tooley. The concert was a great success, the room being crowded in every part.——ON the 15th ult., through the enterprise of Mr. Smith, Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda gave a pianoforte and violin recital, at which the celebrated "Kreutzer" Sonata of Beethoven was played. The audience, although a very appreciative one, was not large.

CAMBRIDGE.—The University Press Musical Society, assisted by several ladies, gave a miscellaneous concert, at the Alexandra Room on the 31st of March. Birch's Merrie Men of Sherwood Forest formed the first part of the programme. Mr. Robson, of King's College Choir, sang the music allotted to Robin Hood. The choruses were well rendered, especially in the second part, which consisted of part-songs, &c. Mr. T. Beale conducted.——ON the 16th ult. Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda, gave a pianoforte and violin recital at the Guildhall, before a numerous and appreciative audience. The playing of these well-known artists was much admired.

CHELMSFORD.—An evening concert was given in the Shire Hall on the 14th ult., by the church choir, assisted by Miss Bolingbroke, R.A.M., and several amateurs of the neighbourhood, who kindly gave their services. Mr. Harold E. Stidolph conducted with his usual skill and ability. Auber's overture to Gustave, as a quartett for two pianofortes, was well played by the Misses Ford, Miss Pilgrim, and Mr. Stidolph. Mrs. S. Baker was very successful in "Robert, toi que j'aime," and the Rev. W. Blow contributed violin solos. Miss Bolingbroke's début before a Chelmsford audience was a marked success. The quartett, "Integer Vitæ" (Flemming), by Messrs. Harris, Cleale, Gepp and Stidolph, was well balanced in tone. Mr. Stidolph, in Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique," proved himself a true artist. The part-songs were well sung, especially Sullivan's "O, hush thee, my babie." Miss Ford ably accompanied the Rev. W. Blow in his violin solos, on the pianoforte.

CONGLETON.—Mr. Eyre gave his annual concert on the 29th March, in the Assembly Room, assisted by an excellent quartett party. The executants were Signor Risegari and Herr Witte (violins), Mons. Speelman (viola), and M. Auguste Van Biene (violoncello). The high-class music selected for performance was thoroughly appreciated by the audience. M. Van Biene's solo on the violoncello (a Sarabande and Gavotte, by Popper) was encored. The performance closed with Haydn's celebrated Serenade. Madame Rovina Arnold and Miss Edith Clelland were the vocalists.

CORK.—Rarely has a more attractive programme been placed before an audience in this city than that provided by Miss M'Carty, on the occasion of her benefit concert at the Munster Hall on the 16th ult. Miss M'Carty is a pianist of no mean ability. She possesses an exceedingly brilliant and, at the same time, firm and decided touch, while her style at once shows a keen perception of the ideas of the composer. Her first solo was a "Scherzo," by Mendelssohn, which drew forth a hearty encore, to which she responded by playing a brilliant fantasia on "Home, sweet Home." In her second solo, Thalberg's fantasia, introducing the serenade from Don Pasquale, she was equally successful. Again encored, she gave a couple of Irish melodies. Madlle. Gabrielle Vaillant (violin) and Herr Elsner (violoncello) created a marked effect in all their solos. The principal vocalists were Miss Marie Duval, Mr. Pearson, and Mr. J. Sullivan. The accompaniments were played throughout by Mr. John M'Carty, father of the fair bénéficidire, who may be congratulated on the success of this, her first concert in her native city.

CREWKERNE.—A performance of Judas Maccabæus was given by the Choral Society on Tuesday evening, the 20th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Ellen Glanville and Miss Perry (soprano), Mr. Mathews and Mr. Price (tenor), and Mr. Cross (bass), all of whom acquitted themselves much to the satisfaction of the audience. The band and chorus numbered nearly seventy performers, and Mr. Loaring the parish organist, conducted with great care and judgment.

DERBY.—The Choral Union gave a successful performance of Beethoven's Engedi, and Rossini's Stabat Mater, on the 13th ult. In the Beethoven music Miss Katherine Poyntz, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Henry Pope were the vocalists, and in the Stabat Mater Miss Helen D'Alton sang the contralto part. Mr. Neville Cox presided at the organ.

DERRY.—The Easter services at St. Columb's Cathedral were most effectively rendered by the choir, which has attained to a high state of efficiency under the skilful tuition of Mr. Turpin, the preceptor and organist of the Cathedral. The anthem from the Messiah was especially admired.

DORKING.—A concert, under the direction of Mr. Charles Daws, was given here on the 15th ult. Haydn's "Farewell Symphony," performed by a small orchestra, created a great effect; but the attractions of the evening were undoubtedly the "Toy Symphony," by Haydn, and Mendelssohn's "Clowns' Funeral March," the latter being most enthusiastically encored. The vocal music also gave great satisfaction to a numerous audience. Mr. J. W. Gritton and Mr. H. T. Pringuer were the accompanists.

DOVER.—On Tuesday evening the 30th of March Mr. G. H. Payn gave a sacred concert at the Wellington Hall. Miss Ellen Glanville was the solo vocalist, her rendering of "Rejoice greatly," "Angels ever bright and fair" (encored), and "Oh had I Jubal's lyre," being highly appreciated by the audience. The choir gave a good selection of music from the works of Gounod, Novello, Hatton, &c.——THE performance by the Harmonic Society of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, Elijah, took place at the Town Hall on Monday the 12th ult. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, especially "Help, Lord," "Baal, we cry to thee," "Thanks be to God," and "He that shall endure." The orchestra included most of the amateur and professional musicians of East Kent. The solo vocalists were Miss Dalmaine, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Trelawny Cobham, and Mr. Rhodes, the principal bass of Canterbury Cathedral. The whole performance was under the direction of Dr. Longhurst, who displayed the ability of a practised conductor.

DUNDEE.—The members of the Amateur Musical Society, formed a few months ago under the direction of Mr. John Kinross, gave their first concert on the 7th ult., in Gray's Assembly Rooms, Perth-road. The music performed was Gade's Erl King's Daughter, the same composer's Spring's Message, Schumann's "Gipsy Life," and a fugal chorus, with a most effective subject from Barnby's Rebekah. Miss Margaretta Smyth was the vocalist, and Mr. Kinross conducted.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley gave an organ recital in the Music Class-room on the 1st ult. There was a large audience. The programme was well rendered, and loudly applauded. Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette" was heartily encored, and responded to by the Professor.——THE second Festival of the Diocesan Choral Association, which took place on the 7th ult., was a decided success. The Festival was confined to a full evening choral service. The number of choristers was 181. Mr. W. Harrison, organist of St. James's, Leith, was choirmaster, and Mr. Jamieson, the organist of the church, presided at the organ. The service was intoned by the Revs. J. Sellar, W. Douglas, and W. Hallen, and Tallis's preces were used. The Psalms appointed were the 65th, the 92nd, and the 150th; the two former were taken to Hayes in F, the last to Humphreys in B flat, both bright and tuneful chants. The Cantate Domino was chanted to Crotch in G, and Deus misereatur to Stanley in E flat. There were two anthems—Sir George Elvey's "I was glad when they said unto me," and Dr. Boyce's "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving." An appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. F. Pigou, vicar of Doncaster, and one of the Queen's chaplains.

ERLEIGH.—Mr. H. J. Hendy, organist of Erleigh Church, gave a concert in the National Schools on the 30th of March. Miss Agnes Larkcom, of the Royal Academy of Music, was the principal vocalist, and her songs were received with the greatest favour. Mr. A. F. Rippon's violin solos gained great applause. Mr. W. Hawley sang several songs with effect. Mr. Hendy's performance of Mendelssohn's "Rondo Brillante" in B minor (op. 22) was loudly applauded. The Church Choir sang some part-songs with much spirit.

GLASGOW.—The members of the Queen's Park Parish Church Choir, under the conductorship of Mr. R. Donaldson, gave their sixth annual concert of sacred music in the Parish Church on the 2nd ult. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?" (the 13th Psalm), a selection from Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio, Eli; and Meyerbeer's "Pater Noster;" Haydn's chorus, "Father Almighty;" and Mendelssohn's "O come let us worship." The choir, under Mr. Donaldson's tuition, has attained a creditable state of efficiency. The solos were very well rendered. Mr. R. M. Donaldson presided at the organ with considerable skill.

GLASTONBURY.—The Harmonic Society formed and conducted by Mr. Hemsley, of Wells Cathedral, gave its fourth open meeting in the Assembly Room, on Friday, the 16th ult. The chief feature in the first part was J. Barnby's Cantata Rebekah, which was performed throughout in a very admirable manner, the fugues especially being given with power and precision. The second part consisted of a well-chosen selection of songs, part-songs, madrigals, &c., by the best composers.

GREASBRO'—On Tuesday, the 13th ult., an organ Recital was given in the Congregational Church, by Mr. T. Brameld, of Parkgate, assisted by Mr. T. Harrison, of Rawmarsh, Mrs. Caroline, and Mr. D. Cocking. Amongst the pieces which deserve especial mention were Andante, Adams; St. Anne's Pedal Fugue, Bach; War March, Athalie; pedal Fugue, Bach; and Andante, Wesley. The organ has recently been built by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, London, at the cost of B. Sellars, Esq., of Nether Haugh. Mr. Harrison received well-merited applause for his rendering of "Arm, arm, ye brave," and "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," and an encore in "Why do the nations." Mrs. Caroline was warmly applauded. "He was despised and rejected" was effectively sung by Mr. D. Cocking.

HALLIWELL.—The St. Luke's Congregational Tea Party was held in the Schools, Chorley Old-road, on Easter Monday. The girls' school was well decorated by the teachers and elder scholars, and presented a gay and festive appearance. In the course of the evening, the Rev. J. H. Gibbon, on behalf of the congregation, presented Mr. John Lomax with an illuminated address, an enlarged photograph of himself, both in Oxford gilt frames, and a handsome black marble timepiece, as a token of gratitude and esteem on his retirement from the post of honorary organist of the church. Mr. Simpson, on behalf of the choir, presented him also with a very elegant inkstand. The Rev. T. D. Bolton, of St. Peter's, in a short address expressed his concurrence in the presentations, and the pleasure it gave him to hear and see what they were doing, and wished them every success and prosperity in the future. Mr. Lomax, in feeling terms, returned thanks.

HAY, HEREFORD.—The first season of the Choral Association was brought to a successful termination on the 6th ult. by an excellent concert, under the conductorship of Mr. W. J. Burville, of Hereford Cathedral. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Morrell and Miss Morley. Miss K. Allen was the pianist. At the termination of the concert the president—the Rev. W. L. Bevan—proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. W. J. Burville, the conductor.

HEREFORD.—The thirteenth season of the Philharmonic Society commenced on the 2nd ult. Miss Leyton was the solo vocalist. The orchestra was composed of a large number of first-class musicians, both amateur and professional. The "Bohemian Airs," arranged for strings, were well played, and much appreciated. Miss Antony's pianoforte solo was also highly effective. The concert was brought to a conclusion by a spirited performance of the overture to La Dame Blanche.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The Choral Society gave its last concert this season on the 16th ult., when St. Paul, was the Oratorio performed. The vocalists engaged were Mrs. Hodgson, of London; Miss Crosland, of Huddersfield; Mr. Edward Lloyd; and Mr. H. Rickard, of Halifax, a new bass singer, who made a very favourable impression. Mr. Rickard is a pupil of Mr. W. R. Eckersley, of Halifax.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—The Choral Society gave its second concert of the season on the 7th ult. The first part consisted of secular music, the feature being Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata for violin and pianoforte, played by Messrs. Mountney and Biggin. The second part contained selections from Samson, several numbers of which were encored. "Then free from sorrow" was charmingly sung by Miss Hibbert; "Return, O God of Hosts," by Mrs. Webb; and "Let the bright seraphim" by Miss Gilbert. Mr. Mountney, of Chesterfield, led the band, and Mr. Biggin, organist of the Parish Church, conducted.

JEDBURGH.—A fine organ, built by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, Hull, from specifications by Professor Oakeley, Edinburgh, for the new Parish Church, was opened on the 3rd ult. The organ is placed in a gallery at the end of the church, where it is heard to the best advantage. The design of the front is in keeping with the architectural style of the church, and is of polished pine varnished; the front pipes are tastefully illuminated, and the keys and stops are fitted up in polished walnut. The pedal board is radiating, and all the most modern improvements are adopted in the construction of the instrument. The great organ contains 728 pipes, the swell organ 436, and the pedal 90—in all 1254. The capabilities of this instrument were finely displayed under the masterly hand of Professor Oakeley. The selections were from Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Gluck, Merkel, and Oakeley.

LEEDS.—On Monday, the 5th ult., four vocalists who have associated themselves under the title of the "Yorkshire Concert Party," entertained a fairly numerous audience at the Church Institute by selections from Wallace's opera of Maritana. The party consists of Miss Pauline Grayston (Mrs. Taylor), who showed herself to be thoroughly at home in the soprano music; Miss Emma Kennedy (contralto), Mr. George Nunns (tenor), and Mr. Dodds (bass), with Mr. John Shaw as pianist. For four persons to sing through the greater portion of an opera was no light task; but the vocalists fulfilled it with considerable spirit, and, considering the absence of all dramatic accessories, with good effect.——MR. J. W. SYKES gave his third violin recital at the Leeds Church Institute, on the 8th ult. The selections were from De Beriot, Bach, Spohr, Steveniers, and Sainton. Mr. Sykes sustained the interest throughout by his masterly playing, and the instrumental music was relieved by Miss Tomlinson's vocal selections, which were as well chosen as they were sung. Mr. C. W. Young accompanied.

LISKEARD.—On the 2nd ult. a concert was given in the Parochial School-room by the Choral Society. The first part consisted of selections from the Oratorio Judas Maccabæus. Miss Snell, of Devonport, very ably rendered the airs, "Pious orgies," "Come, ever smiling Liberty," and "Wise men flattering." Mr. Jarvis was equally successful in the recitative, "I feel the Deity within," and the airs "Arm, arm, ye brave," and "The Lord worketh wonders." The second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Faull's pianoforte solo, "Romance sans paroles," by Ravina, was much admired; and songs by Miss Snell, Mr. Jarvis, and Mr. Collins, were well sung. A grand choral waltz from Horsley's Euterpe, brought the concert to a successful conclusion. Mr. F. N. Löhr conducted with his usual skill and ability.

LIVERPOOL.—The fifth and last of a series of concerts in aid of a fund for the erection of an organ in the new Masonic Hall, Hope-street, took place in the banquetting room of the building on the 31st of March. The proceedings were under the directions of Brother Armstrong, and an excellent programme was well rendered by Madame Billinie-Porter, Miss Armstrong, Mr. A. Platt Bean, Mr. W. H. Armstrong, Mr. Billinie-Porter, and Brothers Harrison, Gill, H. J. Loveday, Franklin, Haworth, and Duncanson.——THE 78th Anniversary Dinner of the Apollo Glee Club took place on the 1st ult., Robert Evans, Esq., president; David Jones, Esq., and Thomas Armstrong, Esq., vice-presidents. An excellent selection of glees from the works of C. Evans, T. Cooke, Bishop, Davy, Webbe, &c., were well rendered by the performing members. Mr. Joseph Skeaf presided at the pianoforte.

MAIDENHEAD.—Miss Ada Goldsmith gave two concerts in the Town Hall on the 30th of March, which were well attended by a highly appreciative audience. The concert giver was assisted by Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Gibson, and Messrs. Frank Elmore, Mellor, and Park. One of the principal features in the programme was Sir S. Bennett's Maid of Orleans, splendidly rendered by Miss A. Goldsmith.——THE Philharmonic Society gave its first concert on the 8th ult., under the direction of Herr Max Schultz. The first part consisted of a selection of vocal and instrumental music; Mr. Orlando Christian, Miss Jessie Royd, and Mr. Roberts, of Maidenhead, receiving encores. The second part was devoted to Schiller's Lay of the Bell. Mr. Goolden presided at the pianoforte.

MALDON.—Mr. Daughtry, organist and choirmaster of All Saints, gave a miscellaneous secular concert in the Public Hall on the 7th ult., assisted by Miss F. Osmond and Miss Osmond (Chichester), Master Osmond (Chichester Cathedral), Mr. S. Barnby (Chapel Royal), Mr. De Lacy (St. Paul's Cathedral), and several local amateurs. The songs and glees were well rendered, many being encored. Mr. Daughtry accompanied.

MALVERN (NORTH).—The Choral Society gave the last concert for the season on the 6th ult., before a select and appreciative audience. The programme consisted of part-songs, duets, &c., all of which were very creditably rendered, especially Hatton's "Belfry tower," Macfarren's "Swallow, swallow," and "Drops of rain," by Lemmens. Mrs. Main, Miss Clark, Mr. A. M. Shepherd, and Mr. A. Burston were the solo vocalists. The Society was assisted by Mr. W. Wadely, of Worcester, whose playing of a Meditation on Bach's Prelude was much admired. He was accompanied by Mr. Forrest. Mr. W. H. Main acted as conductor, and Miss Hobro as accompanist. The members of the Society presented the Conductor with a handsome ebony bâton, mounted with silver, bearing an appropriate inscription.

MANCHESTER.—M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts have been continued with an intelligent enterprise, and upon a scale of liberality that entitle the Conductor and the management to great praise. The musical selections are, speaking generally, very judicious. M. Rivière's orchestra is rich in soloists, but many other high-class professional artists have been engaged, including Mr. Aptomas, the Welsh harpist, his brilliant playing rousing the audience to positive enthusiasm. The vocalists have been Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. Thurley Beale, Madlle. Bunsen, and Herr G. Werrenrath.

MARLBOROUGH.—In order to increase the fund which is now being raised to purchase a new organ for the College Chapel, Mr. Bambridge has recently given three pianoforte recitals, assisted by Mr. John Roberts (vocalist), Mr. J. S. Liddle (violin), and Mr. W. H. Aylward (violoncello). Mr. Bambridge played selections from the works of Bach, Moscheles, and Heller, and his own Meditation in B flat. Beethoven's Trio in C minor, by the three instrumentalists, was rapturously applauded. Mr. Liddle as violinist, was highly successful, as also was Mr. Aylward, in his 'cello solo. Mr. Roberts sang several songs, which formed an agreeable variation to the performances.

MARYPORT.—The second concert of the Philharmonic Society took place in the Athenæum, High Street, on the 7th ult., under the con-ductorship of Mr. C. J. Lewthwaite, of Cockermouth, when a well-selected programme was provided. The principal feature in the concerted music was Bishop's "Now tramp o'er moss and fell," the solo being well rendered by Mrs. Holliday. Miss E. Adair presided at the piano, and Peter De E. Collin, Esq., occupied the chair. The members met in the old Court Room on the 13th ult., for the purpose of presenting a very handsome gold locket and chain to Miss E. Adair, for her valuable services as pianist to the Society.

Melksham.—On the evening of the 13th ult. the Amateur Musical Society gave an open rehearsal at the Town Hall. The music consisted of portions of Mozart's Twelfth Mass, anthems, a selection of Mendelssohn's open air music, glees, &c., all of which were exceedingly well rendered. A vote of thanks was proposed by J. Awdry, Esq., to the members and Mr. C. Clarke, of Devizes, conductor.

Montrose.—The second private concert for the present season was given by the Harmonic Union in the Guildhall on the 12th ult. There was a small orchestra, led by Mr. David Lindsay. Mr. C. B. Taylor, the efficient instructor of the Union, officiated as conductor, and Miss M'Laren presided at the piano. Part I. consisted of a sacred Cantata, The Nativity, by Mr. C. Ward, a work well suited to the capabilities of a choir of moderate pretensions. The choruses were the most effective portions, the most successful being "Song of the heavenly host," "The shepherds' chorus," and the final chorus, "Hallelujah."

Newcastle.—A service of sacred song was held on the 13th ult. in the Town Hall, in which the choirs of Congregational churches in Northumberland and Durham, together with those of the Baptist churches in Newcastle, took part. Mr. J. Hall (Durham) conducted, and Mr. Wm. Rea presided at the organ. The solo singers were Miss Nelly Forrest (soprano), and Mr. Whitehead, of Durham Cathedral (tenor). The hymns were sung with great precision and effect.

Norwich.—The second invitation concert for the season of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union took place on the 21st ult., in St. Andrew's Hall, when the performance was honoured by the special patronage and presence of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught. The first part of the programme was devoted exclusively to the performance of Mr. Frederick H. Cowen's Cantata, The Rose Maiden, the principal parts being sustained by Miss Bessie Hill, Miss Case, Mr. H. J. Minns, and Mr. W. N. Smith. The second part presented many novelties to a Norwich audience. Foremost among these we must mention Mons. Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette," which was well played by the band. Two items from Dr. Bunnett's unfinished legendary Cantata of Lora were also given with much effect. Mr. A. E. Bunnett played Moscheles's "La Marche d'Alexandre," for the pianoforte, with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the audience, who enthusiastically recalled him. A Madrigal by Duncombe was supplied by the choir, and Mendelssohn's overture to Son and Stranger and "The Bride's March," from Mr. J. Barnby's Oratorio of Rebekah, respectively introduced and concluded this part of the programme, the overture being capitally rendered. Mr. Walter Lain presided most ably at the organ.

Nottingham.—The season of the Sacred Harmonic Society has just concluded with an excellent performance of Elijah. Macfarren's Oratorio St. John the Baptist has also been given during the session, with Charles Hallé's band, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley as principal vocalists. The Society is in an extremely flourishing condition.

Oldham.—The members of the Amateur Musical Society gave their usual open evening of the season on the 15th ult., when Mount Moriah, an Oratorio by Dr. Bridge, formed the principal item in the programme. The Oratorio was well performed, the choruses were given with great precision, and the part of the narrator was well sung by a lady member. The duet for Isaac and Abraham was given by two of the gentlemen with good effect.

Oswestry.—The performance of Samson by the Handel Society on the 16th ult. was a genuine success. Mr. Bywater proved an admirable tenor. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, and the excellent way in which the band accompanied was a feature in the concert. The other vocalists were Miss Harriette Leders, Miss Clara Couvane, Mr. Chisholm, and Mr. Glave. Mr. George Pugh presided at the harmonium, Miss Farmer at the pianoforte, and Mr. Whitridge Davies conducted.

Paisley.—A concert of glees, part-songs, &c., was given by the Tonic Sol-Fa Institute, in the Abercorn Rooms, on the 9th ult. Miss Thomson played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3 in E flat, and a fantasia, "Ye banks and braes," and also accompanied. Mr. J. A. Brown conducted.

Parkgate.—The Rawmarsh and Parkgate Sacred Harmonic Society gave an excellent performance of Haydn's Creation in the United Methodist Free Church, on Tuesday, the 30th March. The instrumentalists and choir numbered about 120. The principal vocalists were Madame Helena Walker, Mr. H. T. Bywater, and Mr. T. Brandon. Madame Walker gained great applause for her rendering of "With verdure clad." Mr. Bywater met with a hearty reception, and Mr. Brandon, also, was exceedingly well received. The precision and effect with which the choruses were given proved that much care had been exercised in rehearsal. Mr. T. Brameld conducted.

Parsonstown (King's Co.)—A Choral Society has recently been formed here, and the services of Mr. Matthew Arnold engaged as conductor. Weekly rehearsals of important works and glees are held in John's Hall. There are upwards of 70 members.

Blagrove led, Mr. Sidney Naylor presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Löhr conducted.

Ramsgate.—On Wednesday evening, the 7th ult., the members of the Choral Society gave a musical entertainment at the Granville Hall, under the direction of Mr. Pollard. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was well given by the choir; the programme also contained a good selection of music, all of which was successfully performed. Macfarren's part-song, "Up, up, ye dames," and the trio, "Ti Prego," were much admired. A trio by Beethoven was exceedingly well played by Mr. Morley (violin), Mr. G. Foster Cooke (violoncello), and Mr. Pollard (piano). Miss Duval and Mr. H. Guy contributed several songs. The accompanists were Mrs. Stride and the Rev. R. G. Osborne.

Reading.—The Choral Society gave its first concert on Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., in the Town Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. John Old. A band of twenty instrumentalists played several overtures. Mr. Old's dramatic chorus, "The Battle," was one of the features of the concert. Most of the pianoforte accompaniments were played by Dr Naylor, and Mr. Knapp conducted.——The Handbell Ringers' concert took place at the Londesborough Rooms on the 20th ult. The programme was well varied, and the execution throughout gave great satisfaction to the audience. A choice selection of songs and duets, excellently rendered, repeatedly called forth the hearty plaudits of the audience. Mr. Moxey was accompanist.——On the 13th ult. Mr. Charles Harvey's benefit concert took place at the Albert Hall, when selections from the Messiah were well rendered by Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. E. The orchestra comprised the principal local talent, under the leaderhip of Mr. Carrodus. Mr. Frederic Archer presided at the organ, and Miss Parkes at the pianoforte. The latter part of the programme comprised selections from The May Queen, by Sterndale Bennett, and a Concerto in F minor (Op. 19), in which Miss Parkes took part. The chief item in the Bennett selection was the unaccompanied quartett, "God is a Spirit," which was encored.——On the 19th ult., the Directors of the Albert Hall Company gave a concert, which, as far as the attendance was concerned, proved a complete failure. The vocalists engaged were Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Alice Fairburn, Mr. Bernard Lane, Mr. Thurley Beale, with Mr. Blagrove as concertina soloist; who went through a well-selected programme in a manner deserving of a better audience.

CONCORDIA

A Journal of Music and the Sister Arts.

TO BE PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, PRICE 4D.

On May 1st, will be issued the first number of Concordia, a Journal chiefly devoted to the interests of Music.

Concordia is not projected upon any assumption that existing Musical Journals have failed to properly discharge their mission. But, while the good service those Journals are doing receives hearty acknowledgment, it is believed that, owing to the rapid spread of musical taste, room exists for another labourer in the same cause. Concordia will enter the field, therefore, not in opposition to its contemporaries, but as a fellow-worker with them.

While holding definite opinions, Concordia will strive to make itself the organ of an enlightened eclecticism. Regarding every question without prejudice, and solely in the interest of Art, it will encourage in its contributors and correspondents that free expression of ideas which ultimately establishes truth. Above all, it will be actuated by a desire to recognise and promote whatever is good in the new developments which are inseparable from the progressive nature of Music.

A leading feature of Concordia will be the number and importance of its original Articles and Essays. Arrangements are in progress to obtain the co-operation of writers eminent in their respective departments, and it is believed that, from a literary point of view, Music will have, in the new Journal, a worthy representative. Among the gentlemen who have already signified their willingness to contribute to Concordia, are:—

J. Barnby.
Joseph Bennett.
W. Chappell, F.S.A.
W. H. Cummings.
E. Dannreuther.
H. Sutherland Edwards.
Rev. H. R. Haweis, M.A.
Henry Howe.
John Hullah.
H. C. Lunn.
G. A. Macfarren, Prof. Mus., Cantab.
Walter Macfarren.
Professor H. S. Oakeley, M.A.
Ebenezer Prout, B.A.
Charles K. Salaman.
Henry Smart.
Dr. Stainer, M.A.
T. L. Stillie.
Dr. W. H. Stone.

From week to week, notices of subjects connected with the sister Arts of Poetry, and Painting, the Drama, &c., will be contributed to Concordia by able writers.

As a medium of news, Concordia will be singularly complete. Correspondents in all the chief towns of the United Kingdom, and in the principal Cities of the Continent and America, will keep its readers well informed as to the progress of Music at home and abroad.

Special attention will be paid to that criticism of Art and its exponents which is the greatest responsibility, as it is the greatest privilege, of such a Journal. On all matters involving criticism, Concordia will speak with a single desire that the truth may be known; strong in a conviction that the temperate utterance of honest opinions must surely win respect.

The department of Reviews will receive the careful attention called for by its importance. The best available talent has been secured, and, whenever necessary, the letter-press will be accompanied by illustrations in Music type. Prominence will be given, in this department, to the leading works published abroad.

Among other valuable features of Concordia will be, subject to the co-operation of the various publishers, a weekly list of new Music. Arrangements are also in progress with a view to give, week by week, particulars of the Services, Anthems, &c., to be sung in the Cathedrals and chief Parish Churches of the United Kingdom, on the Sunday following each issue.

It is believed that, in Concordia, the art-loving public will have a thoroughly readable Journal—one, that is to say, which interests the Amateur not less than the Connoisseur. No pains will be spared in order to secure this desirable result.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE, NINETEEN SHILLINGS & SIXPENCE.

A scale of charges for Advertisements in Concordia may be had on application to the Publishers.

THE PICTORIAL POWER OF MUSIC.

By G. A. MACFARREN.

IN days gone by, when hopes were fresh that have been disappointed or fulfilled, and when expectations were for a future that has now become past or present, folks used to talk of "descriptive music," as a class of composition which was either above or below other writing, according as the estimator was younger or older at heart, according as he thought of what was to come, or of what, having been, was ever to remain. The term is now-a-days supplanted in the sentences of many essayists by "program-me music," with the French redundant syllable, as if to attest the foreign source of the definition; and this is used in opposition to "abstract music," which latter refers to pieces without a title, but implies pieces without a distinct non-technical meaning. Whether "descriptive" or "program-me" be the better epithet, matters little; either defines such compositions as avowedly represent some idea that is extra to the notes, some thought that is apart from the melodies and the harmonies and the modulations, but is yet contained in them. Let us then consider how long it is that composers have sometimes acknowledged such a purpose in their works, how far such a purpose belongs alone to vocal music, or is limited in this by the direct statement in the words that are set, how far it is exercised in instrumental music also, and how far there is still an expression, though unacknowledged, and even though unknown to the producer, in the whole mass of music. These points are worth consideration, as illustrating the respect due to the imaginative or poetical element in our art, in addition to the artistry evinced in the rhythmical divisions, the contrivance of the parts, the more or less sudden changes of key, and the conduct of the plan, besides the copious machinery of colouring, by means of the various tones of different instruments, and the varieties induced in these by difference in their combination.

Not to seek among the musty traditions of earlier time, one may refer to the extant works of two musicians of so long ago as to bear a high antiquity in comparison with the very far later development of music than of the other arts. Firstly, Dietrich Buxtehude, the renowned organist of St. Mary's Church in Lubeck, lived from 1638 till 1707, and left in print, besides a multitude of other works, seven Suites de Pièces for the harpsichord, representing the several characters of the seven planets; a flight of fancy the subtlety of whose aim has not been exceeded. Secondly, the Abbate Antonio Vivaldi, commonly called "Il Prete rosso," because of the hue of his hair, died at a round old age, in 1743; and he published twelve Concertos for string instruments, depicting the qualities and impressions of the four seasons; and another piece which is familiar as the "Cuckoo Concerto," wherein the notes of the "wandering voice" are conspicuously set down; anticipating thus the thesis of a Symphony by Spohr, and the appropriation of natural sounds to art use by Beethoven. Then there is the Capriccio by Bach for the harpsichord, written in 1704, representing the dissuasion of a beloved brother from a hazardous journey, his resistance of the same, and his departure, and concluding with a fugue on the notes of the postboy's horn; and what can be more modern in purpose than this, more descriptive, or more programmatical? There are the same composer's Pastoral Symphony in his Christmas Oratorio, and Handel's piece of the same name in his Messiah, both figuring the shepherds at watch in the bright starlight on the night of the Nativity. There is the Symphony in Samson, to represent the falling of the building overthrown by the miraculous strength of the blind hero—almost the single instance of Handel's use of chromatic passing notes—and that in Belshazzar, which is quaintly, but characteristically marked "Allegro postillions," to accompany the supposed hurried entrance of the throng of wise men summoned to interpret the prophetic writing on the wall; and need one look in the works of any age for a truer image of the feeling prevalent among the dramatic persons than the Dead March in Saul or the Jubilant March in Judas Maccabæus? Haydn's representation of the earthquake in his Seven Last Words, and of chaos in his Creation, bring the art of descriptive instrumental music a generation nearer to our own age. Even Beethoven, the accredited inventor of the practice, was forestalled by a few years in his design of the Sinfonia Pastorale, the earlier conception of pourtraying pastoral life in orchestral music being due to one Knecht, an obscure composer, who wrought in a place, little less unknown, called Biberach. Glorious specimens of descriptive music are Beethoven's Overtures, all four of them, to Leonore, that to Coriolan, and that to Egmont; and his Sonata representing a farewell, absence, and a return, belongs to the same category. Rossini worked with the brush of a scene-painter in his Overture to Guillaume Tell and in the representations of a storm that divide the action of the second act in the Barbiere, Matilda di Shabran, and other of his comic Operas. Spohr evinced his descriptive power in his Symphonies, the Consecration of Sound, the Contention between Earthliness and Godliness in the soul of man, and the Seasons, and in his Overture to Azor and Zemira, representing the storm, the wreck of the merchant's vessel, and his magical rescue. Weber's Concert Stück tells a complete story of anxiety in absence, a knight's return, his true love's eager rush to meet him, and their rapture in each other's embrace. The success of Mendelssohn has been equal to that of the best of them in his Overtures, and in his Reformation Symphony and in those two orchestral works recording his impressions in Scotland and in Italy. The tone-pictures by Sterndale Bennett, namely, the Naïades, the Wood-Nymphs, and Paradise and the Peri, are each a masterpiece. Latest, if not last, the Abbé Liszt and Herr Raff are writing symphonic poems and Symphonies without the assumption of poetry, purposing to paint in tones the pictures announced in the titles they choose.

Thus much for the pictorial in music for instruments. It is the admitted province of compositions for voices, from the close of the sixteenth century at least, to express the words to which they are set. Many and many an author has been uncontent to limit this word, express, to the sense of declaim, and has found means to illustrate his text by figures of his own imagining, fully as metaphorical as anything that graces the verse of a poet. Think of the weighty wall of waters and the rippling of the harmless waves against it, in the chorus "He led them through the deep," the sense of substance as in our London fogs in "He sent a thick darkness," the oppression as of a heavy mass of ice at "congealed in the heart of the sea," all in Israel in Egypt; and again, of the helpless groping, where hands have to fulfil the eyes' office, in "The people that walked," in the Messiah of the same master; and say, but with no hope for credence, that the music paints not, with power unmistakable, very far more than is stated in the words. Who can say that those howling notes, with their peculiar instrumentation, convey no meaning that accompany the mention of Cerberus in the chorus of Elysian spirits in Gluck's Orfeo? There is the incident in Fidelio of the waving of the lamp before the eyes of the swooning Florestan, to find, by their sensitiveness to the light, whether he still lives, and the streaming phrase for the hautboy as much suggest the moving brightness as it recalls the captive's last uttered thoughts of his Leonore. Every song of Schubert shows the entire surroundings of the songster, whether in the turning of the wheel while Gretchen plies her spinning, or in the violent rushing of the horse, the night wind and the agitated father's thoughts in the Erl King, or in countless not less beautiful instances. Except, however, from all cases to be admired, the curious specimens of objective imitation that abound in the Creation, and wonder the while that so great a master as he who wrote the work should be so little of a poet.

The questionless perspicuity of these vocal instances of which the words indicate the purpose, proves that instrumental music may be equally full of meaning though this have no external indication.

Descriptive instrumental music has its worst side outwards in the so-called "Battle Pieces" and other things of the class, that were more in vogue from fifty to a hundred years ago than they are now, beginning with Kotswara's Battle of Prague, that was erewhile as certainly to be found in a ladies' boarding school as a back board or a French "mark;" including Dussek's Sorrows of Marie Antoinette that ends with a glissando descent from the top to the bottom of the pianoforte to picture the fall of the guillotine; and not omitting the work of Beethoven himself that was designed, not merely to commemorate, but to describe Wellington's success at Vittoria. In these and such as these, the description is of prior consideration to the music, and, to prevent the possibility of any portion of this being misunderstood, the staves are interlined, in most cases, with indications as evident as "The cries of the wounded," "the agony of the royal lady when her infant son is torn from her arms," and so forth. To another species of delineation belongs the notable piece by Cesti, wherein the purpose to represent a rainbow is effected by the successive entry of all the instruments in the score, beginning with that on the lowest staff and ending with that on the highest, each for a single note, followed by the reverse of the succession, with which image if the eye be satisfied, it is possible the ear may not. All these compositions, from the meanest upwards, address but a low order of intelligence, and their littleness gives licence to many effective sallies against the pretence to address the sight through the hearing or to set forth visible objects by means of sounds.

Indisputably, all musical images are vague, and are susceptible of various interpretation by different hearers. It is more than forty years ago that a party of young musicians met, of whom some have proved their right to the world's esteem and have won due acknowledgment, who discussed the point in question. Two, in particular, affirmed that the Overture to Oberon told a tale as graphically as words could relate it. In support of their view, they each separately went apart with a third person, and stated to him, from phrase to phrase, the course of incidents that Weber's imaginative piece pourtrayed; and then, the holder of both their confidences revealed the two to the rest of the company, and showed thus that in no single point did the several translations of the unmistakable narrative accord, save and except only that the first three notes, and the same phrase when it recurs in the key of E, stand for the charmed horn of the legend, which verily they do as truthfully as anything in art or nature can stand for itself. Beyond this, the rushing waters of the one were the armed knights of the other, the ardent love of this picture was embodied in the Elfin antics of that, and so on, and so on to the end of the chapter. The exception has been stated and exemplified; let it be answered by the fact that herein lies the pre-eminence of music over other arts as a medium of poetical expression. That the witness of a work of art is a necessary party in the explication of what it signifies, makes him to some extent a partner in the artistry; and this also gives to the fabricator of the work a wider range of appeal to sympathy, than he can have who speaks more definitely. It is a distinction between science and art, between fact and imagination, that the things which belong to the former are definite, positive, real, while those which pertain to the latter are to some extent misty, vague, insubstantial; the precision of outline which verifies the first is rounded or clouded off so as to give the second the air of a vignette instead of a framed drawing. So long as the work in question falls not into obscurity, the greater the elasticity of its expression, the higher its poetry. The sign-board that exhibits an indisputable red cow or blue lion is less considerable as a work of art than a painting by Landseer that suggests to the spectator a long train of fancies as to the feelings, all but human, of the animal it presents, excited by the circumstances in which the brute is involved. A newspaper notice of a royal visit to the city or elsewhere may be as accurate as a tradesman's invoice, but has no halo of possibilities and probabilities as to coincidences and consequences of the occasion; the Duke of York's description of the entry into London of the triumphant Bolingbroke and the falling Richard conjures up a thousand suppositions of the characters of the two, of the fickleness of the people, and of the fate of England past and to come. Still more free is the power of musical suggestion, still wider is its scope, and still higher on this account should be its estimation.

In needing a title to make its purpose comprehensible, a piece of music exceeds in degree perhaps, but certainly not in fact, a painting or a drama. For example:—in an exhibition of pictures, two friends, who had no catalogue, admired a certain painting, but were at a loss as to what might be its subject; a beautiful youthful figure held a dissevered human head, and this the beholders surmised must be the daughter of Herodias with King Herod's reluctant gift of the head of the Baptist, wondering the while at the shortness of the damsel's garments, but accounting for this as designed for the display of her recent dancing, and applauding it as a happy suggestion of the artist; the description in the book was, "No. 811, David with the head of Goliath." Again:—in a theatre, other two friends, who had no playbill, were witnessing a performance of Pizarro, when an actor's illness had necessitated the change from Brutus, of which latter our playgoers had read the announcement; they were bewildered, as well they might be, by the discrepancy between the incidents before them and their historical recollections, but they ingeniously endeavoured to fit the one on to the other, strangely wondering, however, at the hoary age of Orozembo when the Spanish tyrant orders the execution of the venerable Peruvian, naively saying that they thought it was his son whom Lucius Junius condemned to death, and this old gentleman looked more like his father. Just in like manner would the Pastoral Symphony or the Overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream lose its representative power on him who knew not its title, and who might in his ignorance ascribe to it a meaning different from that which filled the mind of the artist.

Musicians have always been singularly reticent, in comparison with literatists and limners, as to the extra-technical purpose of their work. Whereas, every book that is printed and every picture that is shown bears a name to define its subject, the result of a musician's labours is in almost all cases "a deed without a name." By no means on this account is every piece of music subjectless or written without regard to particular expression, whatever may be the peculiar diffidence or bad shame of the artist in hiding from the world the thesis of his inspiration. Haydn's biographers state of him that he always conceived a story before he wrote a Symphony, such as of a sea voyage with the vicissitudes of prosperity and tempest, of a course of true love which never yet ran smooth, or of a departure to battle and a victorious return, and that the music is the language wherein these unacknowledged tales are told. Haydn is not the single instance of a composer who has passed through such a mental process. It signifies nothing to the argument whether the artist be the inventor or only the illustrator of his theme; Shakspeare's Tempest may be before his mind's eye when he paints his fanciful tone-portrait, or a conceit of a storm at sea with its results that never had action outside his own thoughts, or the loss of the Medusa, or any other veritable shipwreck; and he may amuse himself, if no one else, by making his music wild or tranquil, agitated or serene, according as bad or good weather prevails in his imagination, and as the fears or hopes are paramount of the voyagers. This is not all; without admitting, even to himself, a plot, he is yet a narrator, if only of the thoughts and feelings that live and work within him during his period of composition. The same man will produce a graver work or a gayer, a calmer or a more agitated, a month sooner or later in his life, according to the passions that sway his heart, and be unconscious all the while that he is setting down an autobiography. It is hard to believe, indeed, that any artistic work can be all expressionless, save only a scholastic exercise; nay, perhaps not even this, for the man's patience or his want of it, his resignation or his eagerness will speak out in the smoothness or roughness of his lines, in the formality or quaintness of his words, in the fluency or angularity of his counterpoint.

The analogy of painting and music has been many a time expounded. Some points of it, however, have not been always noticed, and may be worth recapitulation. The term composition holds good in both, and in the latter art more particularly has its synonym in construction, design, plan. The current of modulations, their relation to an original or principal tonic, the chief prevalence of this and its recurrence at necessary periods, have their complete likeness in the reference of all the points in a picture to its principal light and in the just arrangement of all its forms. Thus far, a literary work comes equally into the comparision, which must have its beginning, its middle, and its end, its centre whence all events and arguments radiate, whence all the characters are developed, quite as much as has a pictorial or a musical production.

To pass from generality to detail, the employment of harmony to characterise a melody or give point to a certain note, and the broad boldness that is attained by its occasional absence when all the parts at command, whether voices or instruments, proceed in grand unison, or the delicate lightness when all but one cease to sound, and this one proceeds with more or less grace or volubility alone, are entirely comparable with the expression in a drawing, whether of the faces of a figure piece or of the manifold forms in a landscape. How endless is the variety of character and significance that may be given to the same melody by difference of harmonisation and by the timely appropriation of a single chord to a particular note of the tune, and how variously may portraits of the same face be made to express all the emotions to which the face's owner may be subject, and as variously may representations of the same view express gloom or cheerfulness or any other temper that rules the artist while on his work!

The non-musician is scarcely aware of the boundless power this resource of harmony affords to the artist, who by its means makes his most delicate touches and his grandest, conveys his subtlest meaning and his broadest. Every chord, nay each inversion of a chord, has a significance of its own, but it is as impossible to define all these capabilities of expression, as it is to state the meaning of every modification of a curve or inflection of a line. To attempt a dictionary that should assign a verbal power to every harmonic combination or to every linear convolution, would be preposterous in itself and fatal in its results in proportion as it approximated to success, since it would change fancy into convention, subvert truth into dogma, and limit beauty by prescription, if not annul it fully. Another means of musical expression analagous to the resources of the draughtsman, is the difference of figure with which a melody may be accompanied, either in sustained or repeated or dispersed chords, or in an intermixture of passing-notes with essential notes, an invaluable accessory to the more important elements of melody and harmony, which adds largely to the significance of both. So too does the manner of casting a shadow over this or that side of a face, or of a projecting rock, or of a pool, or of a turret, whether in a plain mass of colour, or in a cluster of lines or of dots or of whatever configurations may better be described, all of which palpably bear on the expression of the passage.

Thus far, our picture may be in black and white or in the diverse degrees of shade and light of any one hue; and thus far, one piece of music may be for a single instrument or for several instruments of the same quality of tone. Then come in the gorgeous varieties of colour to the pictorial artist, and the orchestra with its many diversities of tone is the rainbow of the musician. The variegation of blue and red and yellow and all the grades between them, is not greater than that of violins and trombones and flutes and trumpets and bassoons and drums of all kinds. In the Sextet in Don Giovanni, when the torchbearers enter, and when the key is changed from E flat to D, how totally different a colour is given to the whole orchestra by the tone, unused before, of the trumpet. This is but one of countless instances in which orchestral colouring is obvious to every perception. The relationship in effect between a piece for many instruments and a pianoforte arrangement of the same, and that between a picture in many colours and an engraving or a photograph of the same, are completely analagous. Instrumentation is in itself a deep study. It begins in giving prominence to a melody over its accompaniment, by playing the two with different qualities or degrees of tone on the pianoforte. It is practised in assigning to a tenor voice, in a vocal quartet, notes that are wanted to be more obvious than those in the lower register of the female voices that are really sounded above the former. It reaches its perfection in that delicious art which Mozart may be said to have originated and perfected. It is abused, (let us hope to the utmost) in the writings of some living Germans who set many brass instruments to play in unisons and eighths if they wish to give distinctness to a cantilena, and who suffocate the voice by the sustained harmony of double-basses and soft wind instruments. Were a painter to use jet black for his chief shadows, leaf gold for his principal lights, and a coating of the eighth of an inch thick for his transparent hues, he might produce similar effects. Nevertheless, some of the composers alluded to are extolled as masters of orchestration, and some of them propose to improve the colouring of the greatest masters; but, happily, their method and their self-assurance have not yet an analogue in the sister art.

A beautiful comparison has been made of the respective capabilities of poetry and statuary as exemplified in Virgil's description of the death of Laocoon and the antique sculpture of the same subject. The present discussion admits of a corresponding illustration, in a parallel between the scene in Bach's setting of the Matthew Passion where Jesus, declares that one of the twelve will betray Him, and Leonardo's picture of the Last Supper. In the former, the anxious question, "Is it I?" passes from lip to lip, while yet the painful feeling which prompts it continues in each member of the group; a loving spirit of fidelity pervades all hearts but one, and the anguish is common to them all at the possibility that either of them can be treacherous to Him who is the centre of their devotion; as the utterance is prolonged by repetition so is the pang extended in each heart that quivers under its torment. In the masterpiece of da Vinci, it is for the spectator to dilate the sufferings of the assembled apostles by lengthening his gaze upon its presentation in each separate countenance, and his further contemplation of the general attitude of the company. The music expresses the continuous, the painting shows the instantaneous working of the same emotion. The effect of the one upon us, might approximate to that of the other, were it gradually unrolled so as to pass from side to side like a moving diorama; but then it would share the disadvantage of music in its transiency, in its being come and gone without giving time for investigation.

It is now, lastly and chiefly, to consider what is described, or pictured, or, to refer to the phrase of the day, prographed in music. A music lover, after this kind, once said that he liked "that portion in Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony which represented the windmills"—but this was not the artist's aim, nor is it his end. Neither are the jagged rocks or the dashing waters of the Hebrides exhibited in Mendelssohn's Isles of Fingal, nor the forms and groupings of the insects in Handel's "He sent all manner of flies," nor the skeletons of the deer and the hunters in Weber's Wild Chase in the Air, nor the wretch who learned to pray from the innocence of the child in Bennett's Paradise and the Peri. Most epigrammatically and most completely was the whole purpose of this class of music set forth in Beethoven's announcement of the great work which stands foremost in everybody's thought of the matter—"Mehr Ausdruck der Empfindung als Mahlerei," (More the expression of feeling than a painting). There is and there can be no pretence in any work of the kind to show more or less than what would be the artist's impressions under the circumstances supposed, and this is shown in his own language, which happily is one without a glossary, that depends for its free translation on the perceptivity of the hearer. Who has basked in the sunshine and felt the kiss of the soft breezes in the open country, who has mused beside a running stream and noted the rippling of the current and the rustling of the leaves and the chirping of the birds, who has watched villagers at their merry-making, who has witnessed the rise and climax and culmination of a storm, and who has seen the returning peace of nature with the outburst of gratitude that flows from all animate and even inanimate existences—he has in his own breast the key to Beethoven's imaginings, and he may unlock the magical casket and be at one with all its images. Already has been suggested that every work of art is a subjective picture, a confession of the joys or sorrows of him who produces it. In this respect, an unentitled piece of music somewhat resembles a landscape or a pastoral poem, which possesses a personal character, in so far as it may express the feelings of the author, beyond the positive facts of which it is a statement, namely, that there is a tree to the right hand, or a brook to the left, or a hill in the distance, or the warm glow of a summer heaven pervading the whole. To-day, one may regard these objects with grateful devotion; to-morrow, with regret for the companion with whom he once viewed them; again, in the overflow of animal spirits springing from health or from some fortune apart from the scene; at another time, in the indifference of a purposeless hour; anon, in the despair of frustrated endeavour. Whatever the mood, this will bespeak itself in the description, and, whether in lines, in words, or in notes, the individuality of the artist will be evident in his work, and the program will be traceable, even though it may not have been prescribed.

These remarks are the wild growth of a fertile theme. With cultivation it would yield a rich harvest to the thinker, but even these random words may indicate that there is store of fruit for the gathering.

THE fashionable frequenters of the boxes and stalls of our lyrical establishments will, we are certain, be glad to find that they can now procure "Operatic Perfumes." The titles of those already advertised are the "Marimon Bouquet," "La Belocca" and the "Rising Star," dedicated to Madlle. Zaré Thalberg. As the names of our prime donne are always placed prominently at the top of the bills for the evening, everybody will be able to know the proper scent to purchase; and we can imagine that it might be worth while—as the prices are sometimes raised when a great favourite sings—to compromise the matter by presenting a bottle of appropriate perfume with every three tickets. Meanwhile we think that a "Titiens Extract" would be a welcome addition to the scents for the season.

ALL who watch the tactics of lessees and managers of our public entertainments must be aware that, whilst either executants or works of a high class are left to make their own way without any undue assistance, failures are puffed and bolstered up by eulogy of every conceivable kind, in the hope of disguising the truth until something new can be got ready. How refreshing, then, is the following announcement from the Prince of Wales's Theatre: "The performance of "The Merchant of Venice" having failed to attract large audiences, the play will shortly be withdrawn." All honour to the manageress of this establishment for initiating a system which shall make the public believe in her successes. Who knows but that the lessees of the Opera-houses may in time see the policy of adopting some such plan with their patrons? For instance "The Opera of——, produced last evening, having been pronounced feeble and inartistic by a crowded house, will not be repeated;" or, "The voice of Madlle.—— having been recognised as extremely fine, but requiring more cultivation, she will quit the stage for some time and diligently resume her studies." A little sincerity like this would at least have the charm of novelty.

THAT three pieces by an English composer, and four native vocalists should have been heard at a "State Concert" at Buckingham Palace must, we imagine, have astonished even the Court newsman, who has had to chronicle the names of foreign artists for so many years that he no doubt thought British musicians to be incapable of singing, playing or composing. The vocalists thus honoured—Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Santley—have every reason to congratulate themselves upon this mark of favour; yet we cannot but regret that Sir Sterndale Bennett—whose works were on this occasion selected to adorn the programme—should have been allowed to pass away before Royalty could thus publicly recognise his genius.

AT the recent dinner in aid of the Artists' Orphan Fund Mr. Leighton, R.A., proposed, as one of the toasts of the evening, "The Sister Art of Music," to which Mr. Arthur Sullivan responded. This tardy recognition of a long neglected member of the family is a welcome sign of the time; and we feel certain that when her claims to an equal share of the world's sympathy shall have been fully admitted, the "sisters" will work most amicably together. We may now reasonably hope that at the next banquet of the Royal Academy of Arts something may be said of the power of music, as well as of painting and sculpture, to refine and educate the people; and meanwhile beg sincerely to tender our thanks to Mr. Leighton and Mr. Arthur Sullivan for their united efforts in behalf of the cause.

WE should like to ask those who have interested themselves in a subject lately ventilated in our columns whether, in parliamentary language, they have had their "attention called" to a pamphlet, recently published, entitled "Degrees and 'degrees'." If not, we can conscientiously recommend it for perusal. Considering, too, that candidates for degrees ought to know tolerably well how to proceed to acquire such an honour, what can the following advertisement mean which we copy from a contemporary, suppressing only the names and addresses: "Gentlemen desiring to obtain a Degree in Theology, Law, Arts, Science, Literature, Philosophy, Music, Medicine or Dentistry should apply to * * *"!

THE BENEDICT TESTIMONIAL.

A BRILLIANT assemblage of artists and amateurs, including His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, was gathered together in the saloon of Dudley House, Park-lane, on the afternoon of the 19th ult., the occasion being the presentation of a testimonal to Sir Julius Benedict, as a mark of respect not only for his exceptional artistic qualities, the proofs of which, both as an executant and a composer, have been so frequently displayed during a period of forty years in this country, but in acknowledgment of his genial disposition, and the generous aid he has invariably given to those who needed a helping hand at the commencement of their career. Earl Dudley, who had kindly granted the use of his house for the meeting, occupied the chair, and in presenting the testimonial made a most eloquent speech, in which he spoke in the highest terms of Sir Julius, and made many graceful allusions to the estimation he was held in by the most eminent artists, and the popularity obtained by his innumerable compositions, especially alluding to the honour conferred upon him by Her Majesty. Sir Julius Benedict, in returning thanks, said:—"I cannot find adequate words to express the feelings that come upon me at this moment. I cannot thank you sufficiently for this splendid testimonial which you and other friends have just presented to me under this hospitable roof by the hands of Lord Dudley. I wish I had one-tenth of the eloquence with which his lordship has spoken in order that I might fully express my thanks to you all; but as that cannot be I must throw myself on your kind indulgence. I could wish to say a great deal, but I am almost paralysed by your kindness. I could have wished to tell you of times gone by, and to have spoken to you of great masters with whom I have had the honour of being associated. I could have desired to say something of Weber, Bellini, Rossini, Donizetti, and Mercadante, and to have gone on to advert to Sir George Smart, Sir Henry Bishop, Balfe, Loder, Wallace, Macfarren, and last, not least, Sir William Sterndale Bennett; but I will not attempt to inflict on you a long speech, which would be entirely out of place. I can only muster words to thank His Royal Highness for the great honour he has done me in being present on this occasion—a distinction I shall never forget; to thank you, Lord Dudley, for the part you have taken in presiding on this occasion, and for the kind words you have spoken of me; and to thank all the ladies and gentlemen here present, and the other subscribers to this splendid testimonial, for having so generously responded to the appeal by one to whom I owe a great debt of gratitude. When I first arrived in this country, though a stranger, he took me by the hand and gave me my first appointment as conductor of opera, and for many years gave me excellent assistance and advice—I mean the late Mr. John Mitchell. He would have been pleased to have come to witness so gratifying a demonstration in my favour, and to have crowned his many great kindnesses by that last act. He was not spared to do so, but I think I owe it to his memory to take this opportunity of acknowledging his great kindness. I will not detain you much longer. I only wish to say that, whatever small merits there may be in my music, I may claim some others which, perhaps, are the chief reasons for your so kindly coming forward and presenting me with this handsome testimonial. I think I may claim the privilege of saying that I am not envious of anybody, but am always glad to try, whenever I can, to forward the interests of other artists. I will conclude my few remarks by returning you again my most hearty and sincere thanks, and to ask you to excuse my imperfect utterances and peculiar Germanisms being in the way of making my feelings, which are much better than my speech, understood." His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, in an appropriate speech, proposed a vote of thanks to the Testimonial Committee, which was briefly acknowledged by Mr. T. Chappell; and, after a similar compliment to Earl Dudley, who had returned from Italy for the occasion, the proceedings terminated. The testimonial, which was universally admired, consists of an ornamental silver table service, comprising a centre ornament, pair of candelabra, and dessert stands. The centre ornament, bearing eight branches and glass tazzas for flower decoration, is surmounted by the figure of Apollo (a copy of the celebrated statue in the British Museum), and supports on its base figures of St. Cecilia and Sappho. The inscription is as follows:—"Presented to Sir Julius Benedict, Kt., at Dudley House, on the 19th of May, 1875, by a large circle of amateurs and artists—the Earl of Dudley, president—in appreciation of his labours for forty years for the advancement of art, and as a token of their esteem." On the reverse are engraved Sir Julius Benedict's arms and the various decorations which have been conferred upon him. The candelabra, each of which carries seven candles, are designed strictly in accord with the centrepiece; they are enriched with reliefs of suitable subjects, viz.: Orpheus releasing Eurydice from the infernal regions, Ulysses charmed by the Sirens, Orpheus playing to the wild animals, and Pan leading a dance of wood nymphs. The dessert service also carries out the general design, and bears figures of a musical character.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

WE have often wondered why the classical character of the winter concerts at this establishment should be abandoned in the summer, and music-lovers be compelled to seek for good works at other places, or to listen to operatic scraps in an atmosphere where they have been taught to expect only the highest specimens of the art. At last we are enabled to record that the seasons of the year are no longer to influence the nature of the music. The programme of the first summer concert, on the 15th ult., could scarcely perhaps be at all distinguished from one of the series just terminated; and when we say that on the following Saturday the selection included Beethoven's Choral Symphony, it may be concluded that these entertainments can be fairly accepted as models of those which are to follow. All the instrumental works have been, as usual, finely rendered, under the able conductorship of Mr. Manns; and the vocalists have comprised most of the leading favourites of our concert-roooms.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

WE have little to record at this establishment during the past month. Madame Nilsson's return has, of course, necessitated the re-production of Balfe's feeble Opera, "Il Talismano," but we can scarcely believe that any amount of "forcing" can make this composition a stock piece in the répertoire. Madlle. Varesi has materially strengthened her position since her début in "Rigoletto" especially as the heroine in "Lucia di Lammermoor," her success in which was most decisive. "Lohengrin" is, we are told, in active preparation; but Opera four nights a week must be rather trying to choral singers who are expected to do any justice to the exacting music of Wagner at the daily rehearsals.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

AT length Herr Wagner has been fairly placed on his trial in this country. Fairly, we say, because he has had the advantage of a stage and its accessories, but German disciples of the composer will scarcely perhaps admit that such chorus singing as was heard at the Royal Italian Opera on the production of "Lohengrin" on the 8th ult., can convey anything but a faint impression of that poetical feeling which, according to Wagner, should pervade every portion of a work designed for the lyrical stage. It is late now to discuss the theory so ably put forth by this composer, but something may be said of the effect of this theory when, for the first time, we see and hear it in action. It is remarkable, considering how Wagner first thought solely as a poet, and became a composer from the absolute necessity of calling in music to aid him in the development of an ideal conception, that, apart from any such considerations, the whole work should fall upon the ear as an artistic and appropriate setting of a libretto written for a conventional audience in a conventional Opera-house. The excessive tenderness of the melodies which colour the love scenes between Elsa and Lohengrin, the chivalric character of the music accompanying the stage pageantry, the tumultuous and exciting nature of the choruses of the people, and the masterly power displayed in the instrumentation must be felt by all who have ears to hear, and judgment to return a verdict according to the evidence before them. Something indeed there is much deeper than this—something which no man better than Wagner knows must make its way; but the process will be slow—at least in England—for art must cease to be fashionable before its real value can be gauged, and Opera in this country has not yet become National. The truth cannot be disguised that the Teutonic element in the house had a marvellous effect in teaching the audience that "Lohengrin" was not to be judged by the ordinary standard; so when the usual round of applause was given for the favourite singers on their entrance and the boisterous marks of approbation burst forth after an effective morceau, a very decided "hush" convinced the astonished Opera habitués that the vocalists must be considered as secondary to the work they were interpreting, and that any congratulations to individual performers must be reserved for the fall of the curtain. Thus far then has Wagner influenced us for good; and whatever may be the ultimate fate of his works in England, there can be little doubt of the truth of his conviction that the composer has a higher mission than that of administering to the frivolous taste of a frivolous audience.

"Lohengrin" must not be accepted as the latest embodiment of the theory of its composer. There may be—and probably is—as much difference between "Lohengrin" and the "Ring des Niebelüngen" (which has not yet been heard), as there is between "Der Fliegende Holländer" and "Lohengrin." Wagner's books must be consulted by all who wish to trace the growth of the idea which has ruled his artistic life; but the result of his philosophy may be found in his Operas, and so progressively developed as to convince even those who disagree with him of the singleness of purpose with which he has worked. Some feeling of disappointment may be widely felt when we are told that the "art work of the future" is to be based upon mythical legends, and that consequently "Lohengrin" "the type of the sole, real classical subject," and Elsa, "woman—woman, as not previously understood," should be characters which never could have had any real existence; but those who would judge Wagner are bound to come into court with an unbiassed mind; and when we say that for five and twenty years the Opera now submitted to our notice has been gradually rising in public estimation; that it has been played to enthusiastic audiences not only in Germany, but at Bologna, Florence and in the United States, there can be little doubt that it contains within it an element of vitality which cannot fail to preserve it even in the most uncongenial atmosphere.

The story of "Lohengrin" is exceedingly well adapted for musical treatment. The scene is laid in Antwerp. Henry the Fowler, King of Germany, who has come to summon his subjects in Brabant to aid him in resisting his Hungarian invaders, finds Telramund claiming the right to the sovereignty of the Duchy, Godfrey the son of the late Duke having unaccountably disappeared. Elsa, Godfrey's sister, is accused by Telramund of having made away with the young Prince, and the King decrees that the case shall be decided by combat, Elsa choosing her champion to do battle with the accuser. In her dreams, Elsa has beheld a Knight whom she imagines will aid her in her distress, and prays to him to appear. After a summons from a trumpet, a Knight is seen on the river, in a boat drawn by a swan, and Lohengrin (one of the keepers of the holy "Grail") steps on the land and offers to become Elsa's champion, on condition that, if the victor, she will become his wife, and will promise never to question him as to his name or whence he came. In the duel, Telramund is defeated, and the marriage of Elsa and Lohengrin takes place. Ortrud (the wife of Telramund), however, persuades Elsa to ask the fatal question as soon as they are left alone after the marriage service. Telramund, who enters the bridal chamber to assassinate Lohengrin, is himself killed by the Knight, and before the King, and court the secret is revealed, Lohengrin departing in the boat which brought him, having first restored the young Prince, Godfrey, who had been transformed into a swan by the magic arts of Ortrud, a white dove descending to occupy the place of the bird. The first thing that strikes us in listening to the music with which the composer has illustrated this poem is the continuity of idea—that one distinguishing feature which, whether for good or evil, separates this Opera from all others that we are acquainted with. The pieces which have latterly been so much heard in our concert-rooms seem no longer melodious fragments which may be legitimately detached from their places, but appear to spring up as naturally from the action of the drama as the long string of accompanied recitative into which they are woven. As abstract music of the highest class we may instance Elsa's dream, Lohengrin's Farewell to the Swan, the scene between Elsa and Ortrud in the second act, the duet in the bridal chamber, the chorus where the people first behold the champion knight on the river, and the bridal chorus; the purely orchestral pieces already known—the fanciful and poetical prelude to the Opera, and the introduction to the third act—gaining immeasurably in significance by being heard in the situations assigned to them by the composer. Madlle. Albani's conception and execution of the part of Elsa must have fully satisfied the most exacting admirer of the composer. Her delicacy of phrasing in the love scenes, the tenderness with which she compassionated the condition of Ortrud, and the utter despair which she exhibited on the departure of Lohengrin, and the consequent frustration of all her dreams of happiness, were amongst the finest displays of artistic power we have ever seen on the operatic stage. Madlle. D'Angeri, too, in the somewhat thankless character of Ortrud, sang well throughout the Opera, occasionally, perhaps, displaying a somewhat hard style, but always showing an intelligent appreciation of the dramatic exigencies of the part. In Signor Nicolini we had quite an ideal Lohengrin, every phase of the character having evidently been studied with an earnestness in the highest degree to be commended. The music, too, lies well within his register, and both his declamatory and cantabile phrases were finely delivered. M. Maurel was excellent as Telramund; Signor Capponi's voice told well in the music assigned to the Herald, but Herr Seideman (a new comer), as the King, showed more zeal than power in the important solos which fell to his share. As we have before hinted, the choruses were rough and uncertain throughout. Granted that they are enormously difficult, there is of course additional reason why they should have been rehearsed until competent authorities pronounced them sufficiently perfect to be submitted to a public audience. We are not of those who believe, that because an Opera has been hurried forward, every allowance should be made for all the shortcomings which such a system necessitates. The scenery and dresses were superb, and reflect the utmost credit upon the management. Indeed, the glittering and brilliant armour of the soldiers proved that Henry the Fowler was not a man to be trifled with, for many well disciplined troops, after so long a march, might have found it difficult to look their best with such a lime light as was thrown upon them on their arrival in Brabant. A good word must be said for Signor Vianesi, the conductor, to whose untiring exertions much of the success of the Opera was due, and who shared with the principal singers, on the fall of the curtain, the warm congratulations of the largest audience ever assembled, we should think, within the walls of this establishment. Imperfectly as Wagner's ideas have been realised by the production of one of his representative works with so little preparation, we are thankful to the lessee for at length redeeming the pledge which some time ago he so emphatically gave in his prospectus. Whether English people will grow to the theory which is embodied in this Opera, is still an open question; but neither hostile criticism nor derision are to be dreaded by those who desire to advance the views of the composer in this country. A subscription-list may still be essential for the support of an Opera-house, but it has little effect upon the progress of art; and in pronouncing a true opinion upon the Wagnerian Opera, we have more faith in the public than in the subscribers.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

THE Whit-Monday Concerts given here, both in the morning and evening, although of a popular kind, were exceedingly good, and supported by vocalists whose ballad singing is always welcome. Mr. Sims Reeves made a genuine hit in Arthur Sullivan's song, "The love that loves me not;" Madame Lemmens-Sherrington in "John Anderson my Jo," and her husband's song, "Down in my heart a little bird," was warmly received; and Madame Patey in Wallace's "Sweet and low," and Barnby's "Thou whom my heart adoreth," elicited the most enthusiastic applause. Madlle. St. Alba, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Signor Foli also contributed songs with much success; and Madlle. Clarita Sanjuan gave two of De Beriot's violin solos so well as to encourage the brightest hopes for her future. The glee singing was excellent; and a word of commendation is due for Mr Hoyte's performances on the organ. The vocal music was ably accompanied by Mr. W. H. Thomas.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

HERR WILHELMJ'S performance of the first Allegro and Andante of Rubinstein's Violin Concerto in G, at the third concert, was in every respect admirable. The composition, too, is highly interesting, the Allegro, especially, being a finely written movement and containing some most effective conversational passages between the solo instrument and the orchestra. The principal orchestral piece—Schumann's Symphony in B flat, No. 4—was a welcome item in the programme, and was on the whole extremely well played. At the fourth concert, on the 10th ult., a very good performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony was given, the principal vocal parts being carefully rendered by Madame Blanche Cole, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Wadmore. A new pianist, Herr Lodovico Breitner, displayed much power and facile execution; but we should like to hear him in more exacting music than the showy Concerto in E flat, of Liszt, before pronouncing any judgment upon his artistic qualifications. A feature in the selection was Schumann's charmingly fresh and tuneful chorus, "Gipsy life," which was capitally sung, and pleased so much as to elicit an enthusiastic encore. At both the concerts noticed Mr. W. G. Cusins, as usual, conducted.

VERDI'S REQUIEM.

THE performance of this work at the Royal Albert Hall, under the direction of the composer, has been one of the great events of the musical season. A full rehearsal of the composition was given at the Hall on the 12th ult., to which a large number of artists were invited, and the judgment on the music upon that occasion was so highly favourable, that the verdict of public approval emphatically pronounced at the representations on the morning of the 15th and the evening of the 19th ult., might have been confidently anticipated. The minute analysis of the work which has recently appeared in this journal, will absolve us from the necessity of any detailed description of the music; but the presentation of the score to the ear revealed beauties which the eye could scarcely detect, and even those who will insist upon judging this "Requiem" by comparing it with other "Requiems," must admit that it contains much that is thoroughly original, earnest, and effective. When we say that the treatment of the "Tuba mirum" (with its several trumpet calls) is not to our mind, and that the "Sanctus"—although displaying much ingenuity in the contrapuntal writing—is based upon somewhat common materials, we have nothing left but praise. The "Agnus Dei" is a perfect gem. The theme, commenced in octaves by the two soprani, and afterwards joined by the chorus, then given in the minor by the solo voices, and harmonised in the instrumentation, came as a veritable inspiration upon the audience, and at its conclusion the applause could scarcely be subdued, even by the repetition of the movement. Beautiful also is the "Lachrymosa," the effect of the plaintive notes of the mezzo-soprano against the bass solo, giving a depth of expression to the words almost indescribable. These two movements are perhaps amongst the purest specimens of spontaneous writing in the work; but we must also instance the "Recordare," the bass-solo "Confutatis" (although we can scarcely reconcile ourselves to the sequence of fifths which accompanies it), and the final "Libera me;" but in naming these we need scarcely say that they comprise only a small portion of the many charming pieces in a composition which cannot fail to take a permanent place amongst the accepted works of modern composers. The solo parts were admirably sustained by Madame Stolz, Madame Waldmann, Signor Masini, and Signor Medini, the first named lady displaying a clear and liquid soprano voice, eminently suited to give the utmost effect to Signor Verdi's music. Madame Waldmann was also in every respect highly satisfactory, and both tenor and bass acquitted themselves of their arduous task most successfully, Signor Masini, however, occasionally indulging in a tremolo which much detracted from the effect of his really beautiful voice. The choruses were finely sung by the Royal Albert Hall Choir (which had been previously well drilled by Mr. Barnby), and the orchestra was everything that could be desired. Signor Verdi, who conducted, received quite an ovation, and was evidently much pleased with the manner in which his music had been prepared. In consequence of the great success of the work, two special representations, at popular prices, were given on the 22nd and 29th ult. (both under the conductorship of the composer), before large audiences.

AT the May Concert of the St. George's Glee Union the programme consisted entirely of a selection from the works of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett. The concert commenced with "The May Queen," the solo parts being excellently rendered by Misses Horden and Clara Buley, and Messrs. G. T. Carter and Thurley Beale. In the second part, "Come live with me," and "Sweet stream," were well sung by the choir. The first and last movements of the "Maid of Orleans" Sonata were excellently played by Miss Julia Augarde. Mrs. Odell and Mr. J. F. Smith accompanied, and Mr. T. Garside conducted.

THE recent first production at Berlin of a new Opera by T. H. Franz, entitled "Der Wärwolf," (the words by Paul Frohberg) is looked upon as an event of considerable importance in those musical circles of the northern capital where the reformatory ideas of Richard Wagner are favourably received, The work in question had to be produced under the same disadvantages against which the operatic music of the composer of "Lohengrin" had, until very recently, to contend in this country; the performance took place in the concert-room, and, by being thus divested of the dramatic action and stage surroundings, those elements were wanting which ought to be inseparably connected with the music of the modern "art-work." Such at least is the theory of its founder, and, as applied to his own opera-dramas, it is undoubtedly true. Looking however, at the subject of Franz's Opera and the dramatic action it indicates, we begin to doubt whether the absence of the latter, as in the present case, would not, in some parts at least, be rather an advantage to the music than otherwise. The following is the plot (we are quoting the International Gazette of April the 24th):—"'Der Wärwolf' is laid in the time of the thirty years' war. The beast itself had the misfortune of being a wolf by night, and a man by day instead of a wolf all the time; and he is also endowed with certain magical powers. One of these was represented by a magic ring, which comes into possession of Merode a trooper under Tilly. Merode gains possession of the lovely Oda, the daughter of Count Busso, a magnate of the Harz region, while Oda is loved by and loves Eginhard, a neighbouring Count. The fortunes of those make up the course of the play. As the climax Oda escaping from Merode on a powerful horse is pursued by him in the same equestrian manner, when the Wärwolf springs from the roadside, seizes the steed of Merode and drags it with its rider off a precipice. Oda escapes to Eginhard, and there is joy and a chorus." We fear it will be some time before stage-managers will venture upon the representation of this dramatized version of an otherwise poetical legend; nor do we see how the composer in dealing with the mysterious man-wolf himself, can escape the dangerously close proximity to that extreme which, according to the proverb, is but one step removed from the sublime. This, however, is an objection which may be obviated by the skill of an ingenious manager. Meanwhile it is but just to add that the music was well received by a very select audience and is said to possess sufficient power and originality to have warranted the keen interest with which its first rendering had been awaited. According to the above journal, T. H. Franz had already published one Opera, which was not unsuccessful at the Stettin Theatre, as well as less ambitious pieces, which, though the work of an amateur, were those of an amateur of no ordinary share of talent.

THE opening of the Alexandra Palace, on the 1st ult., was a great success, in spite of the inclement weather, the building being crowded even to inconvenience. Musically we have but little to record. There was a good band, led by Mr. Weist Hill, and a tolerably effective choir; but the selection was most uninteresting, save to those who delight in a concert made up of operatic shreds and patches, and believe in Sir Michael Costa as much as (by the fact of his name appearing three times in the programme) he seems to believe in himself. Madlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Campanini and Herr Behrens were most successful in their vocal efforts, and were rewarded, as they deserved, with the warmest applause. The whole performance was conducted, and we presume arranged, by Sir Michael Costa.

AT the fourth concert of the British Orchestral Society an Intermezzo and Scherzo by Mr. Henry Gadsby produced so marked an effect as to make us long for the Symphony of which we presume they are intended to form movements. The themes are good, the writing clear, and the instrumentation masterly throughout, a freshness pervading the entire composition which amply justifies us in anticipating a successful career for this rising composer. A Concerto di Bravura, for the violin, by Mr. Henry Holmes (excellently played by the composer) may also be commended as a composition of decided merit, and one in every respect worthy of this eminent artist's reputation. Mr. J. L. Hatton's Overture, "The Tempest," at the fifth concert, was received, as it deserved, with marked favour; and although not perhaps taking rank amongst the highest class of descriptive works, it is written with the fluency of an accomplished composer, and contains some excellent orchestral effects. At the same concert a Notturno, for orchestra, by Mrs. Julian Marshall, a student of the Royal Academy of Music, was given with sufficient success to nerve the composer to future exertion, the melodious character of the themes and the constructive power shown throughout the work giving unmistakable proof of a talent which will undoubtedly be cultivated to a good result. Mr. Wingham's Symphony in E flat (a very clever composition) has already been heard at the Crystal Palace, where its merits were thoroughly appreciated. The concerts have been well attended.

ON the 13th ult. the London Gregorian Choral Association held its annual Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral. The voices, numbering more than 1,000, showed evident signs of improvement since they were last heard. The precision with which the unison music was given was highly creditable to all, but in the harmonized music, especially the Magnificat, some slight unsteadiness was apparent. The harmonies of the Canticles, which were varied and interesting, were from the pen of Mr. Warwick Jordan, the able organist of the Association. But, it is to be hoped, that at some future festival settings of the tones may be found harmonized in their own modes. All who have heard such harmonies in foreign churches must have been struck with the broadness and beauty which they possess. Any efforts of the Association in this direction will exercise an important influence on the true position of Gregorian music in this country. With the selection of music only one fault can be found. If it is necessary or advisable to have an anthem, let it be a fine specimen of its class, however simple in structure. The weak thirty-seven bars, arranged from Mozart, called in the service-book "anthem," stood out from the rest of the music like some strange excrescence. Before the commencement of the service some voluntaries were performed by Dr. Stainer and Mr. Warwick Jordan, and the accompaniments throughout the evening were excellently played by the latter. A short and admirable sermon was preached by the Rev. Thomas Helmore, in which he advocated temperately the cause of Gregorian-song, and disclaimed any wish, on the part of its promoters, to limit or retard the progress of the art of music.

AN excellent performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Cantata "The May Queen," was given at the first concert of the Welsh Choral Union, on the 3rd ult., at St. James's Hall. The solo parts were effectively sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Miss M. Jane Williams, Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Lewis Thomas, a large number of the students of the Royal Academy of Music assisting in the choir. The Welsh music in the second portion of the programme was an interesting feature, a band of harps accompanying the choruses. Messrs. W. H. Thomas, Puddicombe, Bampfylde and T. Sylver presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. John Thomas conducted with his usual care and intelligence.

MR. H. WALMSLEY LITTLE gave a concert in aid of the organ fund for Christ Church, Woburn-square, at Store-street, on the 3rd ult., assisted by the Misses E. Blair, J. King, A. E. Bolingbroke, Messrs. W. A. Howells and A. F. Jarratt, vocalists; Miss C. Aptommas, harp, and Miss E. Edridge and Mr. G. F. Smith, pianoforte. The concert-giver was highly successful in his pianoforte solo, Chopin's second Scherzo, Op. 31, and in a duet with Mr. Smith, "Allegro Brillante" (Mendelssohn). A very elegant song by Mr. Little, "The fountains mingle with the river," was charmingly sung by Mr. Howells, Mr. Jarratt gave a good rendering of "The young mountaineer" (Randegger), and the vocal solos by the ladies were received with enthusiastic applause, many of them being encored. Some part-songs, under the conductorship of Mr. Little, were sung by a select choir.

AN amateur concert was given at the St. Mark's Schools, Regent's-park, on Wednesday evening the 5th ult. Mr. George Calkin conducted, and the Rev. E. D. Galloway accompanied the solos and choruses. The programme commenced with Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," which was rendered in a very effective manner by the St. Mark's Choral Class; the solo "Lord, at all times" being well given by Miss Fogarty, and encored. Miss Steele, Miss Johnstone, Miss Janet King, Miss Goodall, Mr. G. Calkin, Mr. Conrad King, and several others contributed to the vocal music. Miss Grassman played one of Beethoven's Sonatas on one of Messrs. J. and J. Hopkinson's pianos (kindly lent by them for the occasion), and Miss May a movement by Hummel. Much praise is due to Mr. Calkin for the training of the chorus. Mr. Galloway accompanied.

THE annual performance of the "Messiah" in aid of the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians, took place at St. James's Hall on the 7th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Mesdames Blanche Cole, Osborne Williams and Patey, and Messrs. W. H. Cummings, J. Williams, Stanley Smith, and Lewis Thomas. Mr. Willy led, Mr. E. J. Hopkins presided at the organ, and Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted.

UNDER the denomination of "Public Rehearsals" the Concordia Choral Society, conducted by Mr. T. Carisbrooke Merrick, is giving a series of performances, the fourth of which took place on the 5th ult., at the Ladies' College, Little Queen-street, Holborn. It is an interesting feature of these concerts that the programme of the evening is devoted entirely to the works of one master, and on the occasion referred to C. M. von Weber ruled supreme with his "Jubel Cantata" and selections from his operas and pianoforte compositions. The solos were on the whole well interpreted by members of the choir, and the effective rendering of the choruses, reflected credit on the zealous conductor, whose manifest desire to increase the appreciation of sterling music among his audience we gladly welcome. He was ably assisted by Miss Merrick and Mr. A. Merrick, who acted as accompanists.

A PERFORMANCE of "Saul" was given by the Brixton Choral Society at the Angell-Town Institution, on the 10th ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Stroud, Miss A. Newton, Mr. G. T. Carter and Mr. Theodore Distin. The accompanists were Mr. Jas. Coward and Mr. J. G. Boardman, and Mr. W. Lemare conducted.

THE Chamber Concerts given by Mr. Alfred Gilbert and Madame Gilbert at the Gallery of the Society of British Artists, are in every respect entitled to the highest praise. The programmes contain an excellent selection of classical music, both vocal and instrumental, and are so arranged as to afford opportunity at the termination of each concert for the inspection of the Gallery of pictures.

MISS AGNES ZIMMERMANN gave an evening concert at St. James's Hall on the 29th April, which was attended by an audience evidently prepared to appreciate a programme framed rather for the select few than the many. The concerted pieces were Beethoven's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 69), a Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin, the composition of the concert-giver, and Schubert's Trio in B flat, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello (Op. 99). The refined and intellectual performance of Miss Zimmermann was the theme of general admiration in all these pieces; and as she had the co-operation of Herr Straus (violin) and Herr Daubert (violoncello) it is needless to say that the general rendering of each work left nothing to be desired. Of Miss Zimmermann's Sonata we recorded our highly favourable opinion when played by the composer and Madame Norman-Neruda last year at the Hanover-square Rooms; and we have now only to say that it was received by the audience with equal marks of favour. Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," dedicated by the composer "to his friend W. S. Bennett," were excellently played by Miss Zimmermann; and, although rather "severe" for a concert-room, were warmly applauded. The vocalist was Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, who was enthusiastically encored in a graceful song by Miss Zimmermann, "Only a year ago, love," and also sang with much success two songs by Rubinstein.

ON Monday evening, the 10th ult., Miss Florence Wydford gave her annual concert at the Horns, Kennington. The artists engaged were the Misses Agnes Drummond, Josephine Pulham, Marian Haigh, Florence Wydford, and Messrs. Henry Guy, Theodore Distin, E. Stone, and Thurley Beale. Miss Adelaide Pulham, Miss Fanny Henman, and Mr. George F. Smith, R.A.M., presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. C. P. Mann conducted. The programme comprised many well-known songs, several of which were encored. A pianoforte and concertina duet by Mr. C. P. Mann and Mr. E. Stone, on "Scotch Airs," was loudly applauded.

A CONCERT and operatic performance was given at the City of London College, Leadenhall-street, on Thursday, the 20th ult., under the direction of Madame Liebe Konss. There was a good programme. Miss Clara Perry, a pupil of Madame Konss, was highly successful in her songs, and in the Trio, "My lady the Countess," with Miss Reid and Madame Konss, which was enthusiastically encored. The entertainment concluded with Offenbach's Operetta "Breaking the spell," in which Miss Clara Perry took the part of Jenny, and Messrs. Oakland and Baylis Peter Bloom and Old Matthew, the Chelsea Pensioner.

At St. Mary, Aldermanbury, an effective choral service was held on the evening of Ascension-Day, when the music was rendered by the members of the Aldermanbury Musical Society, numbering 200 voices, assisted by the ordinary choir of the church. A short address was delivered by the Rev. C. C. Collins, M.A. Mr. Edward Craig, the musical director and conductor to the Society, presided at the organ.

We understand that the Plymouth Vocal Association has in rehearsal for the coming season Handel's "Solomon" and "Messiah," Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" and Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" (second time of performance). This will be the eighth season of this Society, which is under the conductorship of Mr. F. N. Löhr.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, set to music in the key of B flat, for four voices. By Berthold Tours.

This is a very clever and effective setting of the two canticles, and exemplifies to the best advantage the character of modern church music. The ancient narrow view of the progression of 5ths and 8ths have been happily expanded of late, and the ear has been taught to approve what the eye of old condemned. There is no doubt that our ancestors would have disapproved of a progression that occurs in the organ part at the bottom of page 10, where a chord of G minor is followed by one of B flat major, with the parts in exactly the same relative positions. Whether their decision would be endorsed or not by the more recently acquired liberality of the sense of hearing, we confess to having a prejudice against the sound as well as the appearance of such progressions. It can hardly be expected that musicians should abstain from writing for the church, music which meets with the approval of the majority. A man must be more than human who has an eye for principle and duty alone, and until we return to the simple rushlight and the primitive mystery of the Gothic temple, we must expect blazing harmony and a gaseous flavour in our church service. The call to write for the church is assumed to be universal, while the mantle of the prophet falls on but a few. We do not say that Mr. Tours is not one of the minority, but recognizing his musicianly power and the resources he evidently has under control, we regret that he does not entirely devote himself to the secular branch of his art. Let us hope that he has not gone beyond his noviciate, so that his return to the world can be effected without scruple or remorse.

Cantate Domino and Deus misereatur, set to music in the key of F major. By Arthur H. D. Prendergast.

This is a melodious and well-written work. The use of the triad on the flat 7th of the scale gives a quaint character to the phrases where it occurs. We would, however, counsel the author to compare the effect of the dissonant 5th on the 3rd of the scale when it has been previously prepared, with its effect taken without preparation in the first bar of the Cantate Domino. Preceded by a tonic, and followed by a supertonic triad, that on the mediant is particularly harsh. Mr. Prendergast is evidently a thoughtful writer, and he will therefore consider this point well before he makes his final decision. We can confidently recommend the Service.

A Morning Cathedral Service, consisting of Te Deum, Jubilate, and Kyrie eleison. By Sir George Elvey.

We cannot but regret that the modern unbridled use of chromatic harmonies should have enthralled composers who devote their talents to the Church. From excess, however, springs reaction, and hence we see to-day a school of pre-Raphaelite painters, the Gothic revival in architecture, and the Gregorian chant resuscitated. To take up the traditions of the school from the point where the high road was deserted, is a task we can only expect to be undertaken by earnest, able, and humble minded men. Whether Sir George Elvey has written the work before us actuated by philosophy or inclination, we welcome it as a proof that there are still musicians living amongst us who appreciate the principles upon which church music should be founded, and who, while rejecting the extremes of severity and sentimentality, attach themselves to a style which is at once noble, solemn, and lasting.

The Offertory Sentences. Set to music composed by James Fitzgerald, Organist of St. George's Parish Church, Kidderminster.

No doubt Mr. Fitzgerald has been induced to undertake this task by the exigencies of his immediate surroundings. Some of the sentences seem to us to be hardly adaptable to musical rhythm. In the sentence "It is a great thing" the accent may be on the word "is" or "great" but not on the word "it." The 5ths between extreme parts in the accompaniment to the words "for this" at the bottom of page 3, though out of place here, are harmless, but we much dislike the doubled 7th in the last bar of the second line of the previous page.

Benedicite, a Chant Service. By H. E. Havergal, Vicar of Cople.

The difficulty of treating the continually recurring words of this canticle may account for its neglect by composers, and the scarcity of competition would alone warrant our author's production. It will be found useful wherever the Benedicite is chanted.

Six Settings of the Kyrie eleison. Composed by Dr. C. G. Verrinder.

Though lacking simplicity, these settings will be acceptable in places where the Kyrie is the only part of the service which is sung, or on occasions when the musical service for the morning contains no Kyrie.

Grand Chant. Te Deum. Compiled from authentic sources by F. H. Hodges.

Although this piece has a somewhat portentous title, it is difficult to see in what consists the grandeur to distinguish it from ordinary works of the class. It is certainly not extensive enough to warrant Miss Hodges in giving it an epithet which has been applied to certain of the works of the great masters. The composition in itself would be harmless but for a few cases where the third of a triad is doubled, and for a progression in the key of A♭ from $\begin{matrix} B♭ \\ F♭ \\ D♭ \\ G♮ \end{matrix}$ to $\begin{matrix} A♭ \\ D♮ \\ B♮ \\ F \end{matrix}$ the first being the first inversion of a dominant minor 9th, the second a second inversion of a super-tonic minor 9th. The effect of the minor 9th and 7th in the first chord descending to the 3rd and minor 9th of the second chord is very disagreeable. The Te Deum is, however, singable enough.

I was glad. Psalm cxxii. Anthem written for the Consecration of Trinity Chapel, New York, April 17, 1855.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem (from the Anthem "I was glad").

Gloria in Excelsis.

Shout the glad tidings. A Christmas Hymn.

I heard a voice from heaven. Funeral March.

By Edward Hodges, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

Of these compositions by the late Dr. Hodges, the chant and the Gloria in Excelsis have been published (with other works not here enumerated) since his death by his daughter, Faustina H. Hodges, who has thus had an opportunity of at once paying a tribute of affection to her father's memory, and of respect to a musician whom she naturally holds in reverence. It is doubtful whether in principle it is advisable to give to the sacred text a dramatic and personal character, at all events in works whose performance is confined to buildings consecrated entirely to religion. Whether this is so or not, Dr. Hodges has shown his carefulness for the meaning of the text by keeping the words "I was glad" for a solo voice, while the choir previously sing "Let us go unto the house of the Lord."

There is considerable life in the phrase with which the chorus opens, and this is admirably contrasted by the more dignified music given to the soloists, a phrase of whose song to the words "Our feet shall stand in Thy gates" is afterwards taken up by the choir and worked fugally. After a short recitative follows a trio to the words "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem," which is also published separately. This is called an "Exhortation" for three or more priests, and here again we see the intention of the author to separate the priests from the people, giving the former a didactic character and enjoining obedience on the latter. This may be practicable in the churches of America, but here, where the choir is as impersonal as the chorus in a Greek tragedy, such a procedure would be scarcely recognised. The Psalm terminates with a chorus embodying the idea of peace, which is interrupted near its close by a melodious song, "For my brethren and companions' sake." Making allowances for numerous errors of printing, there are some harsh progressions in the course of the work, notably a case where to the words "within thy walls," on the last page occurs the chord  and also on the seventh page last bar but one where a first inversion of a chord of D major is followed by a chord of F major. Still these occasional blemishes are not sufficient to mar a work which evinces great thoughtfulness and care besides considerable musical skill. Of the other compositions before us, which are generally tuneful and harmonious, we like best "I heard a voice from heaven," the harmonies in which are very earnest and intense; while we like least the chant in which, among other disagreeables, occurs a chord where the third is in the bass and the fourth suspended above. The latter, however, has been published since the death of the author. It is possible he would not have sanctioned its appearance before the world, and this brings to mind how, in the matter of posthumous publications, those who wish to pay a tribute of affection to the memory of a loved musician, should temper their enthusiasm with moderation and receive advice from competent authority.

God is our refuge and strength. A full anthem for four voices. Composed by Henry Hiles, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

THIS anthem was composed last year for the commemmoration festival at St. Michael's Church, Hulme, Manchester. It is a work of some length, and consists of three movements, well contrasted, effective and brilliant; the whole terminating with a fugue which cannot fail to enhance the author's reputation. We must, however, confess that the somewhat sensational nature of the harmonies, though fashionable now-a-days, gives the hearer a feeling of restlessness, and the work a somewhat similar character.

Sonata for the Pianoforte. Composed and dedicated to George Alexander Macfarren. By Charlton T. Speer.

EVERYBODY knows that it is not the custom to invite the public to a horticultural show until the flowers are in bloom. It may be interesting to those versed in the science to watch the process of nature in putting forth leaves and buds, and careful gardeners may take a pride in demonstrating how skilfully the plants have been tended, and how much the beauty of the flowers, which will appear in due time, is owing to the unwearied exertions of those who have nursed them into vigorous life; but it is not until the result is obtained that the popular verdict is sought, and then the more who are invited to the trial the better. In musical composition we cannot but think it should be the same: the bud may be promising, but we should prefer to wait for the flower before the crowd is called in to pronounce judgment. In the piece before us the intimation on the title-page that the composer is but fourteen years of age, bespeaks our sympathy for his inexperience, and compels us at once to qualify our critical remarks. We have rarely met with clearer or more thoroughly intelligible writing than is displayed throughout this Sonata; and we certainly see the germ of a good, if not a great, composer both in the themes and the manner in which they are treated. The first movement starts with a well-marked subject, in G major, the development of which is as orthodox as the most rigid teacher could desire. The harmony is remarkably good, and although there is nothing to startle by its originality, the music leaves a highly favourable impression of the author's orderly method of working, and of his skill in constructing legitimate passages for the instrument which he professes. The "Adagio," in C minor, is melodious, and contains sufficient contrast of style to prevent any feeling of monotony. The "Minuet and Trio" seem moulded upon the models left to us by Haydn, but both movements appear spontaneous enough to ward off any charge of plagiarism; and the final Rondo, which we consider the best movement, has a pleasant tripping theme, which, although not elaborately worked, is treated with much skill, the passages growing up naturally and easily, and lying well under the hand. The Sonata, we find, was composed for the "Sterndale Bennett Scholarship" at the Royal Academy of Music; and although, as we have already said, it becomes a question whether it was politic to publish it, there can be no doubt that it is a work which reflects the utmost credit upon the young composer, and one which will justify us in following his career with the greatest interest.

Grand Festal March. Composed for full orchestra, and arranged for the Pianoforte. By Frederic N. Löhr.

THERE is such a family likeness in the Marches that come before us, that we feel almost compelled to transfer our observations upon them from composer to composer with scarcely any alteration. There is a festal character about Mr. Löhr's composition which certainly justifies its title, and we can imagine that it would be much more effective in its grand orchestral dress than in the plain costume to which, by necessity, it must be reduced for presentation in a drawing-room. The opening subject is bold, and the Trio is melodious, and none the worse for a few reminiscences of Mendelssohn, especially that from the "Wedding March" in the twenty-third bar of page 4. The coda is well marked, and makes a spirited termination to the piece.

Guirlandes de Mai. Cantiques à la Ste. Vierge. Par le P. Philpin de Rivières, de L'Orat de Londres (originaux et traductions). Musique de Wilhelm Schulthes, Directeur de Musique a L'Oratoire.

THREE small volumes of this attractive work are before us, the music throughout, although unequal in merit, showing that earnestness and musicianlike feeling which might be expected from so accomplished an artist. The subdued and reverential tone which the words demand is usually well preserved, although—as, for instance, in No. 6, "Salve Regina"—to our thinking the impassioned nature of the text has occasionally tempted the composer into too secular a style, both in the melody and accompaniment. No. 1, a simple theme in 6·8 rhythm, No. 2, a beautifully accompanied legato melody, and No. 3, which most sympathetically speaks the words throughout, are our especial favourites. No. 4 we scarcely like so well, and No. 5, which we presume to be a duet, is somewhat commonplace. No. 6, of which we have already spoken, is a charming hymn, which, as abstract music, cannot be too highly commended. A flowing pastoral subject (like No. 5, written in two parts) is most appropriately wedded to the words of No. 7, and the "Daily Hymn," No. 8, is a truly religious piece. No. 9 is melodious and attractive, but in No. 10, "The Cradle of Mary," we have a highly effective and well written hymn, and of greater length than most of its companions. The change from A major to F is an extremely good point, and the alteration in the character of the accompaniment gives much freshness to the piece. No. 11 is scarcely perhaps equal in interest to the many other quiet and unpretending hymns in the collection; but No. 12 is a composition of importance. It is headed "Noël et Communion; Motet pour voix égales, avec solo et chœur," and has an organ or pianoforte accompaniment, with an effective ad libitum harp part. The melodious and pure vocal writing in this Motet is highly creditable to the composer. The solos express the words with fidelity throughout, and the chorus is used with much judgment. There is a religious tone pervading the entire composition, which makes a worthy termination to the volumes. We may say that the work is beautifully got up, the title-page having an appropriate and elegantly designed illustration.

LAMBORN COCK.

Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Works. Vol. I.

MR. ARTHUR O'LEARY, who edits this attractive edition of the compositions of his lamented master and friend, says in his preface, "It was my privilege to submit him the earlier proofs on the last occasion I had the happiness of seeing him, and hear him express his entire approval of the manner it was proposed to bring out the present collection of his works." It is indeed satisfactory to feel that the form in which the many pieces which this gifted writer has given to the world is now issued, was thoroughly satisfactory to their author; and there can be no question that several of the fugitive sketches which have for years been known only to the profession and the most advanced amateurs will now have a chance of a more extended appreciation. The present volume includes the well-known "Lake," "Millstream" and "Fountain;" an "Introduzione e Pastorale" (a charmingly melodious and graceful piece); Six Studies, Op. 11 (dedicated to G. A. Macfarren); an "Allegro Grazioso," Op. 18, in A major (a well developed sketch, and thoroughly characteristic of the composer's style), besides many works which will be found highly valuable both for practice and performance. The music is clearly printed, and, as might be expected from the editor's interest in the cause, every care has been exercised in the supervision of the proofs. Another volume of so important a work will doubtless be anxiously watched for.

HOPWOOD AND CREW.

Hail to the Chief. Words by Sir Walter Scott. Music by Charles E. Tinney.

A BOLD and effective song, in D minor, which may be conscientiously recommended to baritone singers who desire to venture something less hackneyed than we have latterly been accustomed to hear, both in our concert-rooms and drawing-rooms. There is much character in the octave passages, which occasionally accompany the voice and sometimes form an independent part; and the harmonies are, with one exception, thoroughly satisfactory. This exception is where the accompaniment walks up with the voice part from subdominant to dominant, between the fourth and fifth bars, page 3; a chord of the sixth on B flat, on the last crotchet of the bar, would have been a great relief.

DALDY, ISBISTER AND CO.

Musical Composers and their Works. For the use of schools and students in music. By Sarah Tytler.

BOOKS like these do good, especially when mere facts are related, and readers are allowed to form their own opinions, instead of having them forced upon them by one who, having perhaps much talent for collecting materials, may have but little power in pronouncing a correct judgment upon them. Miss Tytler's work has at least the merit of being carefully put together; the most reliable information has been sought for respecting the career of each composer, and students who begin by reading the lives of those who have shed such lustre upon the art, will probably end by playing and endeavouring to understand the undying compositions which they have bequeathed to us. The authoress need not have apologised in her Preface for devoting so much space to the "sketches of Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Moscheles," for one of the great objects in a book of this kind is to interest readers; and all young persons like to linger over the biographies of those whose names they are constantly hearing. We are especially pleased with the manner in which the lives of Mozart and Mendelssohn are treated, and quite agree with our authoress that, apart from the right which Moscheles, by virtue of his talent, has to a high place in the history of music, his intimate connection with the first composers, makes the record of his career highly valuable. Strange however is it that in a book so well digested, where space does not allow more than a short catalogue of some of the minor composers who have contributed to preserve, transmit, and make popular in their own way, the gentle science in England, the only names mentioned should be "Chappell, Brinley Richards, D'Albert, and the brothers Godfrey."

SIMPKIN, MARSHALL AND CO.

Plan for Teaching Music to a Child. By Mrs. Frederick Inman.

THE earnestness with which this book is written should obtain for it a ready acceptance were all teachers inclined to endorse every view of its authoress. There can be no question that the subject has been deeply considered by the writer, and we are certainly bound to respect the "practical experience of many years" which she mentions as having had in putting her plan into action; but we cannot help thinking that she must have had exceedingly clever children to teach if she has in the majority of instances obtained the results she so confidently predicts. It is manifest that the attempt "to make the introduction of every fresh truth as gradual as possible" has been strictly attended to throughout the work; but will not the accumulation of these "truths" perplex a young student so much as to make her consider music a dry and uninteresting study, instead of a pleasure? For instance, is it not forcing a child's mental power too much to be told, only in the fifth page of the book, that to avoid using double sharps after the scale of C♯ major we make what is called an "enharmonic change;" and in the ninth page to have such shadowy scales as D♭♭, with twelve flats, mentioned? Surely such knowledge, however necessary afterwards, is hardly to be expected from a little reasoner of tender years, and scarcely accords with our authoress's previously expressed opinion that "to hamper a child's memory with things for which there is no present use is, above all, to be avoided in music." Again, we do not quite agree with the manner in which certain "truths" are enforced. "Tell the child," it is said, "that the first note (or key-note) of any new scale is to be found five notes above the old one." What is the pupil to understand by the words "five notes?" If she be clever enough to arrive at the conclusion that the white keys only are to be counted, she will certainly, on starting from B, find her next key-note on F♯. Then does this direction to the teacher appear well considered? "Make a point of showing the signature, and asking what scale or key it stands for. The knowledge, later on, of the common chords will tell the child, as soon as she is able to play anything in a minor key, whether the signature is of the major or minor." If the pupil is to wait for a knowledge of the common chords before she can tell what key a piece is in, of what use is it to ask her previously to name the key by merely looking at the signature? This plan of making the major key the rule and the minor key the exception lies at the root of all the false notions on the subject. That the authoress of this book, however, differs from us in this opinion is proved by the words we have quoted "as soon as she is able to play in a minor key." She evidently believes that there is something exceptional and perplexing about a minor key, the mystery of which is to be cleared up in the course of time, whilst we think that a child can play as easily in one as the other, if she were only to dismiss the old-world notion of "relative minor," and be taught from the first that the key-note is her home, from which she departs, and to which she finally returns, and that the signature determines whether the key is major or minor. Apart from such objections as these, we may say that much will be found in the book worthy of warm commendation. The chapter on "Time" is carefully written, and the accent determined by the figures placed at the commencement of a piece is clearly explained. There is sound truth, too, in many of the observations relating to the care which should be exercised in inculcating a feeling for expression, and for the acquisition of a good touch. In one of the "notes," for instance, the authoress says, "And here I would plead for all children that they may, if possible, be taught on a good instrument. The touch can never be mended which has been ruined by a worn-out piano. The ear can never be so keen that has not heard, from the first, the sustained sound of an instrument which can sing." Unfortunately this is a matter which few persons think of much importance; and we are glad to see attention called to it by one who has evidently her heart in her work. In conclusion, we cannot but believe that this little treatise might be considerably condensed with much advantage. Children, for example, do not require to be told anything about "impossible scales;" and we can well imagine the horror of a little pupil who, opening the book at page 13, happens to light upon the fearful scale of "B♭♭ minor."

WILLIAM CZERNY.

Andante and Rondo, for Pianoforte.
Capriccietto Marziale, for Pianoforte.
Capriccietto, for Pianoforte.

Composed by A. Ergmann.

THESE three pieces are highly favourable specimens of the powers of a composer who is likely to make his way even in the present crowded state of the market. There is a very decided originality in the treatment of the themes, and a freshness in the design of the movements which should recommend them to the attention of pianists who are wearied with the set forms of the majority of modern compositions. The "Andante et Rondeau," commencing with a melodious subject in D flat major, derives much character from a syncopated accompaniment, and the graceful flowing theme in E major, gives a welcome contrast to the opening motive. The "Allegro," in the tonic minor (although written in C sharp minor), contains some really excellent writing, and the skill with which the subject is developed shows that its composer has studied in a good school. The passages will certainly test the executive powers of even an advanced pianist, but there is sufficient merit in the piece to repay any trouble demanded for its due rendering. The second composition is martial in character, and although not equal in pretension to the one just noticed, is worthy of much commendation. The themes are bold and effective throughout, and there is good solid passage playing for both hands. The "Capriccietto" is not so difficult as either of the pieces already mentioned; but what it pretends to do it fully accomplishes. Beginning with a marked subject, in D minor, we have an excellent second theme on a tonic pedal in the relative major. The melody in D major, with the syncopated bass, is both tuneful and effective; and after the return to the minor, the piece ends unpretentiously with a plagal cadence. This group of compositions will, we trust, cause a desire for other and more important works from the same pen.

HODDER AND STOUGHTON; NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

The Congregational Psalmist. Church Anthems, edited by Henry Allon, D.D.

THE learned editor remarks in his Preface that "nothing is more to be deprecated than the delegated worship of a choir performing an anthem with the congregation for an auditory. Whatever may be said in favour of this theoretically, above most things it has been found practically to destroy the worship-song of the people." There can be no doubt that the introduction of elaborate musical compositions into the church service does preclude the possibility of a popular participation in their performance, but if the congregation are not to listen to an anthem, why should they be expected to endure a sermon? Each is sometimes didactic, at others rhapsodical, and each has the same object in view—instruction, praise, or both. The fact is, that if the congregation is to meet with Dr. Allon's approval, the anthem must be discontinued, for the day is, we regret to say, far off when the people will be able to join in the performance of extended compositions without spoiling the effect. If Dr. Allon dislikes to see the congregation silent, the whole character of our church music must be changed, for although it may be subordinate to worship, we refuse to sanction the sacrifice of the proper interpretation and effect of a musical work upon any consideration. Though, however, we do not agree with the principle which originates the volume, we have no doubt the publication will be of great use to numbers of persons who care to follow the music, and so join more closely in the act of praise. The collection comprises more than one hundred well-known pieces, either original or adapted. Of the latter, the selection of a portion of the "Faust" music of Schumann seems to us somewhat incongruous, while such compositions as No. 11 (the first movement of a motet of Bach for a double choir) lose their character and suffer materially when arranged for four voices, however faultless the performance may be. There are eight new anthems written expressly for the work by Dr. Gauntlett and Mr. E. Prout. Nos. 55, 76 and 103 by the latter gentleman are not only capital examples of what modern church music may be, but are admirably suited for the period of general musical education, which the compiler of the volume sanguinely awaits. In No. 84, which is descriptive of the exultation of the Jews after the passage of the Red Sea, there is a certain Pagan vigour which points to a view of Jewish life and history compatible no doubt with its author's position as the descendant and modern representative of Ambrose and Gregory, but hardly suitable for the purposes of the volume. On the whole we can only conclude by saying that whether the hopes of the editor are realised or not, this collection of anthems will prove acceptable to many who attend and enjoy the choral services of the Church.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Voluntaries (Original and Selected). Composed and arranged for the Organ by Thomas Kilner, late organist of Christ Church, Highbury.

WE presume that these compositions, though divided into parts, each containing two to four pieces of music, are meant to form a volume, which will no doubt be found useful by many organists. Now that the shortest interval of inaction in the church service has to be filled up by a few bars of music, we feel grateful to those who will take the trouble to supply the want by compositions or arrangements which may relieve us from the rambling extempore playing we have so frequently to endure. There are twenty-two of these voluntaries, containing about fifty original and ten adapted compositions. The former contain flowing melody with generally correct and not too elaborate harmony, but suffer somewhat from a want of variety and an evident mannerism. In No. 3 the cantabile movement, though slightly marred by a leap in the bass from a second inversion directly after the first double bar, is a graceful piece, which will be found pleasing and useful. Of the two Marches in Nos. 4 and 5, we prefer the Festival March. That for a Funeral is decidedly unworthy of the author. Commencing in D minor, after six bars we find ourselves in G major, G minor, G major again, C major, and finally in the 16th bar we come to a close on the dominant. The whole piece being only a page long, within four bars of the last chord of D minor the key of D major makes its appearance, and we do not understand on what principle a funeral procession should be disturbed by so total a disregard for tonality. In No. 6 the Larghetto in E♭ is quite charming, and is nearly equalled by the Andante in No. 7. We have a capital specimen of a march in No. 9, although the boldness of the transition from a $\frac{6}{4}$ on G♯ to a minor triad on D would have gained musically if a longer interval had elapsed between the two chords. The Jubilant March in No. 11 is not so satisfactory, and the consecutive 5ths from the 2nd to the 3rd and the 10th to the 11th bars of the episode in F do not add to the effect. The remaining pieces present very similar features for blame or praise, and it is unnecessary to speak of them more in detail. The adaptations are selected from the works of Bach, Handel, Pergolesi, Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven. In No 2 we find a movement of Pergolesi, but we do not think he could have been guilty of the 8th between extreme parts and the 5th in third and fourth lines of page 11. Whether the progressions appear in the original or not we must blame the editor's powers either of adaptation or selection. Apart, however, from the musical merit of the series, it seems to us inexpedient to write for the organ on two staves, except in cases where, as in the St. Ann's Fugue of Bach, the pedal part is omitted for a while, or when only three or four parts move at once. Some confusion arises in the pieces under consideration from the crowded appearance of the two staves, although what seems a difficulty to us may very likely be a matter of course to practical and experienced organists like Mr. Kilner.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MEDDLING WITH THE OLD MASTERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Absence from home has prevented me from replying sooner to "Allegro's" letter on the 2nd April. The bars are correct and stand so in Beethoven's revised copy. Of the two versions of the passage quoted from the Sonata, Op. 81, the second is the original.

From a note in Thayer's Chronologisches Verzeichniss (Berlin 1865), it appears that the alteration mentioned by "Allegro" was made first by a Viennese publisher, Mollo, in Beethoven's life-time. There is no reason whatever for supposing that Beethoven authorized the change.

Yours truly,

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ARMAGH.—On Pentecost Sunday the grand organ at St. Patrick's Cathedral, built and erected by Messrs. Telford and Telford, of Dublin, at a cost of about £1,400, was opened with every accompaniment of solemnity and splendour employed by the church to dignify and commemorate such occasions. His Grace the Lord Primate presided at the religious function; Dr. Devitt, Bishop of Raphoe, officiated as bishop celebrant at the Pontifical High Mass. The other suffragan prelates assisting were Dr. Donnelly, Bishop of Down and Connor; and Dr. Conaty, Bishop of Kilmore. The music selected was Haydn's Imperial Mass in C, with selections from Gounod, Liszt, and Rossini, ending with the "Hallelujah Chorus." The vocalists were Miss Herbert, Mrs. Scott-Fennell, Miss Lumsden, Mr. M'Nevin, and Mr. Hayes, supported by a chorus of sixty voices. Mr. R. S. Swaby, professor of music, St. Charles College, Notting-hill, London, was the organist, and Mr. Telford, junior, conducted. The organ is of large size and singularly beautiful appearance, the case being forty feet high and thirty feet wide. There are in all forty-three stops and 2,200 pipes, the double open diapason is thirty-two feet high.

BRADFORD.—The Festival Choral Society gave the first concert of the year in St. George's Hall, on the 26th April. The concert opened with Bach's Cantata, God's time is the best. The solos were taken by Miss Wild, Mr. Leach, and Mr. Thornton Wood. The alto solo, "Into Thy hands," was impressively sung by Miss Wild, and the concluding chorus, "All glory, praise, and majesty," although by no means perfect, was, considering its exacting nature, fairly successful. The quartett from The Woman of Samaria, was beautifully rendered by Miss Myers, Miss Wild, Mr. Leach, and Mr. Wood. Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants," was excellently given. The second part of the programme was devoted to part-songs, &c.

BRIGHTON.—On Wednesday evening, the 5th ult., Madame Cassinello gave her annual benefit concert at the Royal Pavilion. The programme was composed of sacred and secular pieces, very well rendered by Madame Cassinello, Madlle. Teresa Bonini, Mr. Nicholson, and Mr. Lucas S. Palmer. Mr. Robey officiated in the double capacity of pianoforte soloist and accompanist.——MR. WORSLEY STANIFORTH gave an organ Recital in the Dome on Thursday evening, the 6th ult. In addition to three Improvisations, Mr. Staniforth played the "Cantilene Pastorale," of Guilmant, a "Pavaune favorite de Louis XIV.," a Gavotte in F by Reyloff, the G minor Fugue of Bach, and pieces by Lefebure-Wely, Scotson Clark, Hewlett, Spencer, &c. Mr. Edward Lloyd was the vocalist. Various glees and madrigals were sung by Mr. Staniforth's choir.——MR. KUHE gave an Italian concert in the Dome on Thursday evening, the 13th ult., which was well attended. The vocalists were Madlle. Albani, Madlle. Marimon, Madame Vilda, and Signori Pavani, Scolara and Capponi. Sir Julius Benedict was accompanist, and Mr. Kuhe played several pianoforte solos.——ON Whit-Monday two concerts were given by the Band of the Royal Artillery in the Dome. Mr. J. Smyth, the regimental band master, conducted.——AT the daily concerts given by the Aquarium Company during the past month, the following artists amongst others have appeared: Madame Patey, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Madame and Signor Garcia, the Tyrolese Singers, and Miss Martha Harries, the new contralto.

CHELTENHAM.—The last concert for the season was given by Mr. Matthews's Choral Society on Thursday, the 13th ult., at the Assembly Rooms, before a large audience. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the works of Mendelssohn. Especial mention should be made of the hymn, "Hear my prayer," which was rendered to perfection, the solos being effectively sung by Miss Julia Jones. The second part opened with Sterndale Bennett's quartett, "God is a Spirit," sung by Miss Jones, Messrs. Bucknell, Twining, and Phillips, and encored. The same composer's Cantata, The May Queen, concluded the concert, which was in every respect a success. Messrs. Hooper, Bruton, Bartlett, and Matthews presided at the pianoforte and harmonium, and Mr. J. A. Matthews conducted.

CLAPTON.—On Thursday the 13th ult. a concert was given at Brooke House by the choir of that establishment, assisted by members of the choir of St. Matthew's Church, under the direction of Mr. Batchelor, the singing master at Brooke House. The programme comprised songs, duets, glees, and quartetts, which were exceedingly well performed. The solo singers were Mrs. Batchelor, Miss E. Thompson, Messrs. G. Eagleton, Hagan, F. O. Stevens, Wickes, and Master Moorley. "The village choristers" (Moscheles) was sung in a spirited manner by the St. Matthew's Choir. A word of praise is due to Mr. J. A. Jopp, the organist of St. Clement's, Eastcheap, who presided at the pianoforte, and whose admirable solos, and accompaniments to the singing, contributed much to the success of the entertainment.

CLIFTON.—On Friday evening, the 7th ult., Mr. James C. Daniel, brought his season of winter entertainments to a close with a soirée musicale at the Victoria Rooms. The special feature of interest was the performance on the grand organ by Chevalier Lemmens, first organist to the King of the Belgians, who played a series of pieces (chiefly his own compositions), in a manner that proved him to be a perfect master of the instrument. The vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mdlle. Josè Sherrington. Miss Townsend, a local pianist, made her début on this occasion. The concert, on the whole, was much enjoyed by a large audience.

CORSHAM.—The Choral Society gave its second concert at the British Schools on the 4th ult., when there was a very good attendance. In addition to the members of the Society, Mr. W. H. Brinkworth, of Chippenham, and Mr. C. H. Hulls, of Corsham, assisted in the vocal music, and the principal members of the band of the Chippenham Musical Society rendered good service in the instrumental portion of the programme. A good selection of glees, trios, and part-songs was effectively rendered. Mrs. Kenway was highly successful in "When the tide comes in" (J. Barnby), and Miss Poock sang with much feeling the beautiful song "Parted" (Geo. Garrett). Miss Southey gave a solo on the pianoforte, and Mr. C. H. Hills, of the Chippenham Musical Society, contributed a violin solo. The principal part of the second portion of the programme was Locke's Macbeth music, the whole of which was well rendered. Mrs. Baines and Mr. Lewin Spackman presided at the pianoforte and harmonium, and Mr. H. G. Spackman conducted.

DERBY.—Mr. W. W. Woodward, organist of St. Mary's Catholic Church, recently gave a recital on the new organ erected in his studio. The instrument contains eighteen stops, three manuals from CC to A in alt. and pedal organ with thirty notes, with two independent stops on the pedals. It is built by J. M. Granwell, of Derby, and gives great satisfaction. The selections performed from the works of Mendelssohn, J. S. Bach, and other eminent writers for the organ, displayed the instrument to great advantage.

DEVIZES.—The Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah on Tuesday, April 27th, in the Corn Exchange. The principal artists were Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Poole, Mr. Harper Kearton, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom were highly successful. The band and chorus, numbering 160 performers, were under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham. Mr. Waite, of Clifton, ably led the band, and Mr. Millington presided at the harmonium.

DUBLIN.—Miss Kate Croft gave an evening concert on the 12th ult. in the Antient Concert Rooms, which was a brilliant success. She was assisted by Mrs. Scott-Fennell, Mr. and Mrs. Sydney, Dr. O'Donoghue, Mr. Hamilton Croft, and two amateurs, a lady and a gentleman. The programme was judiciously varied, comprising Italian and English songs. Miss Croft sang Braga's "La Serenata," and Maton's "Charmant Espoir," besides taking part in several duets and concerted pieces. Pinsuti's glee, "Good night," was exquisitely rendered by Miss Croft, Mrs. Sydney, Dr. O'Donoghue, and Mr. Crotty; Mr. Hamilton Croft sang with great effect Gounod's "The valley," and Dr. O'Donoghue, Cowen's song, "It was a dream." The band of the Constabulary rendered effective assistance.

GLOUCESTER.—The third and last concert for the season of the Choral Society took place at the Shire Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 18th ult. The Oratorio was Haydn's Creation. The principal vocalists were Miss Ferrabee, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Brandon. Mr. Bywater's singing of the tenor music was highly successful, the air, "In native worth," being encored. The choruses were well rendered. Mr. E. G. Woodward led a small string band, Mr. J. A. Matthews presided at the organ, and Mr. J. Hunt conducted.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES.—The Psalmody Class, conducted by Mr. H. J. Hendy, gave its first open meeting in the Congregational Chapel on Monday evening the 24th ult. The Class, numbering eighty voices, sang several anthems and hymns in a very creditable style, and the duet "O lovely peace" (Judas Maccabæus), given by Miss Pullen and Mrs. Cooper, was loudly applauded. During the evening Mr. Hendy played the following pieces on the organ: overture "The Occasional" (Handel); Offertoire in G (Wely); march from Placida (Carter); aria, "In native worth" (Haydn); "Hallelujah Chorus" (Handel).

ILFRACOMBE.—On Tuesday evening the 18th ult., the Choral Society gave its first concert at the Oxford Music Hall to a large audience. The concert, considering that all the performers were amateurs, was a great success, and argues well for the future of the Society. The choruses were remarkably well sustained, and the solos were in many instances above the standard of amateur performances. The first part of the programme consisted entirely of selections from the Messiah, and the second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Webb conducted, Miss Hawken presided at the piano, and Mrs. B. P. Willis at the harmonium.

LEAMINGTON.—Mr. C. Sydney Vinning, organist of Trinity Church and also of the Leamington College, gave an organ Recital at the former church on the 22nd ult. The programme comprised Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D minor, and pieces of Batiste, Smart, Handel, &c.

LEEDS.—On Friday, the 14th ult., Dr. Spark gave two recitals on the large organ erected by Messrs. Gray and Davison in the Edinburgh Hall of the Yorkshire Exhibition. The programme comprised selections from the works of Bach, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Bennett, Guilmant, Martini, &c., all of which were excellently rendered.——A CONCERT was given in the Town Hall on Saturday evening the 15th ult. The vocalists were Miss Smythe, Miss McDonagh, Mr. E. Kemp, Mr. Charlesworth Prince, and the Part-Song Union, Dr. Spark conducting and presiding at the organ. Miss McDonagh made her first appearance at these concerts. Dr. Spark played the new Festal March, composed by him in anticipation of the opening of the Yorkshire Exhibition, and dedicated to the Duke of Edinburgh.

LINCOLN.—An excellent concert was given in the Wesley Chapel on Friday evening, the 7th ult., by the choir and a few friends. The first part of the programme consisted of Sir W. S. Bennett's Cantata, The Woman of Samaria, which was well rendered. The second part included two organ solos from the works of Alex. Guilmant, played by Mr. Barratt, organist of the chapel, Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," "Nazareth," "By Babylon's wave," (Gounod), &c. The whole of the performance reflected great credit upon all concerned, and especially upon the organist, Mr. J. Barratt, and the conductor, Mr. Barraclough. The solo singers were Miss Smyth, Miss Crosland, and Mr. Adolphus Phillips.

LIVERPOOL.—A complimentary concert was given by the members of the Societa Armonica on the 5th ult. to their conductor, Mr. Armstrong, and leader, Mr. Lawson. The orchestral music consisted of the overtures to Zampa and Martha, Schubert's Rosamunde ballet music, and a violin solo by the leader, all of which were warmly received. The vocalists were Madame Billinie-Porter, Miss Armstrong, Mr. T. S. Hughes, and Mr. Harrison. The concert, on the whole, was highly successful.

MACCLESFIELD.—A lecture upon music, its nature, history of the art, and different styles of compositions, was delivered on the 11th ult. in the Town Hall by the Rev. J. Phillips, A.K.C., curate of the Parish Church. The lecture was illustrated with examples of every style of vocal music by a select choir, under the direction of Mr. Charles Leal, organist of the Parish Church. The proceeds were devoted to the funds of the Infirmary.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B.—The season of the Musical Society (of which Sir Henry Dalrymple, Bart., is president) was brought to a close on Friday, the 7th ult., by a most successful concert, under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Bates, organist of the Episcopal Church of St. Baldred. The first part of the programme was sacred, and contained selections from Elijah, Judas Maccabæus, &c. The second part consisted of a well chosen selection of glees, part-songs, &c., the whole of which were rendered in a manner reflecting the greatest credit upon all concerned.

PERTH.—The Euterpeon Society, conducted by Mrs. Hempel, gave the second rehearsal of this season in the City Hall, on Tuesday, the 11th ult. The evening's programme consisted of Mendelssohn's St. Paul. The solos and pianoforte accompaniment were rendered by members of the Society. Mr. Richmond, of Dundee, presided at the harmonium. The performance was a great success.

PICKERING.—A concert was given by the Choral Society in the National School-room on the 14th ult., which attracted a crowded and enthusiastic audience. The soloists were Miss Blakeley, who sang "The skipper and his boy" and "The sunshine of the heart," with much taste; Mr. B. Johnson, who gave "Eily Mavourneen" and "Come into the garden, Maud," and Mr. D. Spink, whose rendering of "Bonny Jean" gave much satisfaction. Miss Blakeley and Mr. B. Johnson were also greatly applauded for the duets "O Maritana" and "Home to our mountains." The Leeds Glee Union was enthusiastically received and gave several glees, &c., in excellent style. Miss Tyson performed a Gavotte by Bach, and a Saxon air with variations by Dussek, and the concert generally was a great success.

STAFFORD.—On Tuesday, the 4th ult., the leading members of the congregation of St. Paul's Church assembled in the Forebridge School-room for the purpose of presenting an address and a ladies' Davenport to Miss Birch, who for upwards of twenty years has kindly undertaken the duties of honorary organist at that church. The Davenport, which is a most handsome one, was thoroughly furnished with every requisite, and on a silver plate is inscribed, "To Miss Birch, from the congregation and choir of St. Paul's, Forebridge, in grateful recognition of valuable services most kindly and faithfully rendered during twenty years as honorary organist of the above-named church. April, 1875." The presentation was made by the Rev. S. Gilson, the vicar, and Mr. Nevitt returned thanks for Miss Birch. A vote of thanks was proposed to Mrs. Cookson by Mr. John Morgan, she having acted as hon. sec. throughout the proceedings.

STAMFORD.—Ascension-Day was celebrated this year in most of the churches. At St. Michael's the anthem "Lift up your heads" (Messiah) was sung at the evening service and repeated on the Sunday following; the members of the choir acquitted themselves very creditably. Mr. Nicholson presided at the organ and played as voluntaries Mendelssohn's "O rest in the Lord" and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus."

STOCKPORT.—On the evening of the 11th ult. the Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Dr. Bridge's Mount Moriah, under the direction of the composer. The band (ably led by Mr. Seymour, of Manchester) and chorus numbered about 100 performers. The principal singers were Miss Bristow, Master Whitehead, Mr. R. R. Ambler, and Mr. Ellis. The reception of the work was most enthusiastic, Dr. Bridge receiving quite an ovation at the close of the Oratorio. The second part comprised a miscellaneous selection, which was performed in an equally successful manner, the most notable items being two organ solos by Dr. Bridge, and "Waft her angels" (Jephtha), well sung by Mr. Ambler.

TEIGNMOUTH.—The members of the Philharmonic Society gave a performance of the Messiah at the New Assembly Rooms on Friday evening, the 30th April. The choir, numbering between thirty and forty voices, was most ably assisted by orchestral accompaniments, and the various choruses were well rendered. The solos were taken by members of the Society. Miss Brooks, Miss Pearse, Miss Elrington, and Messrs. Beaven, Wills, and Pedrick, sang with their usual ability. The concert was a great success, much credit being due to Miss C. Linter, who presided at the pianoforte, and to Mr. M. G. Rice, the conductor.

VICTORIA (VANCOUVER'S ISLAND).—On Tuesday evening, March 30th, the second Easter festival took place at St. John's Church. The service commenced by the singing of the Gloria from Haydn's Mass, No. 1. The Rev. Percival Jenns read the prayers, &c., and also delivered from the pulpit an excellent discourse on music. Ebdon's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C were admirably sung. The anthems "Hear my prayer" (Kent), and "Call to remembrance" (Novello), were also well rendered; Miss Branks taking the solo. After the sermon the Gloria from Haydn's Third Mass was sung. Miss Branks, Miss Rhodes, Messrs. Redfern and Powel taking the solo parts. The choir, which numbered about forty performers, was under the direction of Mr. Thomas Wilson. Miss Ada Wilson, the organist of St. John's, presided at the organ.

WELSHPOOL.—The Montgomeryshire Choral Union gave a performance of the Creation on Friday morning the 30th April, and a miscellaneous concert in the evening. Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Orlando Christian were the principal artists engaged. Several part-songs were well rendered by the members of the Union. Mr. Bervon and Mr. Gittins conducted; Mr. C. A. Stephenson led; and Miss Helen C. Porteous was the accompanist.

WESTBURY.—A festival of church choirs of the Warminster District of the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Association was held in the Parish Church on Wednesday afternoon the 12th ult. The service was effectively intoned by the district precentor, the Rev. J. H. Pearson; the processional hymn was by Sullivan; the hymn following was by Hopkins, "Songs of praise;" the Psalms were sung to Anglican Chants, and the Canticles to Dr. Wesley's Service in unison; the anthem was by Sir John Goss, from Psalm 148; the hymn before sermon was by Sir G. J. Elvey, "There is a blessed home;" the hymn after the sermon was by Sir John Goss, "Praise, my soul." During the offertory the district organist and choirmaster, Mr. Leach, played "With verdure clad" (Haydn); the hymn after the offertory was "Give of thy goods to God," by Arthur Brown; the recessional hymn was "Brightly gleams our banner" (Smart). The concluding voluntary, Wely's Offertoire, No. 6, was played by Mr. Leach, who effectively brought out the tone of the fine organ, built by Bevington and Sons. The festival was a great success, the music being well rendered by the choirs under their able conductor.

WINCHESTER.—The new organ for the College Chapel, built by Messrs. Bishop and Son, was used for the first time on Ascension-Day; Mr. W. Hutt, the organist, presiding. On Thursday, the 13th ult., being the octave of Ascension, a recital was given by Mr. Jekyll, of St. George's, Hanover-square, and the Abbey, Westminster, which fully proved both the sweetness and power of the new instrument. The rendering of an excellent selection of classical works gave the greatest satisfaction to an appreciative audience. The quality of the swell organ, and two stops, the open diapason, violin and violin principal, was much admired. There is a fine oboe in the swell, and a full-toned clarionet in the choir. The pneumatic apparatus is in a vestry below the organ, and the wind reaches the instrument by a trunk 25 feet long. The case is of Gothic stained oak.

WINDSOR.—The third and concluding concert of the season of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, took place in the Town Hall on Thursday evening, the 13th ult., when Handel's Oratorio Judas Maccabæus was performed. The solos were taken by Miss Bessie Stroud, Master Whitehouse, Mr. A. Marriott, Mr. Mellor, and Mr. O. Christian. Miss Stroud gave a charming rendering of "From mighty kings," Mr. Mellor was very successful in "Call forth thy powers" and "Sound an alarm," Mr. Christian sang with good effect, "Arm, arm, ye brave" and "Rejoice, O Judah." The duets, "Come, ever smiling liberty" and "Oh, never bow we down," were well rendered by Masters Whitehouse and Smith, two of the choristers of St. George's choir. Master Whitehouse joined Miss Stroud in the duet, "O lovely peace," which gained the heartiest expressions of approval during the evening. The orchestra numbered some 60 or 70 performers, the choral portion being strengthened by members from the choirs of St. George's and Eton College chapels. The choral parts were executed in a manner which speaks highly of the careful training the members have undergone. Mr. Liddle officiated as leader of the band, Mr. C. Hancock presided at the harmonium, and Sir George Elvey conducted.

WISBEACH.—The second concert for the season of the District Musical Society took place in the Public Hall on the 13th ult. The sacred portion comprised the second and concluding parts of Handel's Oratorio, Samson. The air "Thus when the sun," was well rendered by Mr. E. Gregory, and Miss Langford's voice showed to advantage in the air, "Let the bright Seraphim." Of the choruses, "Fix'd in His everlasting seat," and "Let their celestial concerts" may be noticed as the most successful. The second part consisted of part-songs, &c. Pinsuti's "We'll gaily sing and play," was effectively sung, the solos being taken by Mrs. H. Sharpe and Mr. E. Gregory. Barnby's "Sweet and low," received a well-merited encore, and Mr. G. Carrick in his song "Martin, the man at arms," was accorded a similar honour. Mr. F. J. Turner, organist of SS. Peter and Paul, conducted, and the Philharmonic Band rendered good assistance.

WORCESTER.—The Philharmonic Society gave a very successful performance of Macfarren's Oratorio, St. John the Baptist, on the 12th ult., in the Music Hall, under the direction of Mr. Done. The solos were effectively rendered by Mrs. A. J. Sutton, Miss Watkiss, Mr. W. M. Dyson, and Mr. Orlando Christian. Mrs. Sutton produced a good effect in the part of Salome, and Mr. Christian was heard to advantage in the rôle of St. John. The quartett, "Blessed are they," unaccompanied, was redemanded. The audience was very numerous.

WREXHAM.—The Gorsedd for the National Eisteddfod of 1876 was held on the 17th ult. with more than ordinary display. In the evening Mr. Brinley Richards gave a lecture upon Welsh national music, illustrated by vocal selections from the music of that and other nationalities by Miss Mary Davies and Miss Lizzie Evans. Mr. Richards, in his lecture, repudiated the statements indulged in by some historians that England had no national music, and that the music of Wales was derived from Ireland, giving data which proved his position. The lecturer was also assisted by Owain Alaw (Mr. J. Owens), of Chester. Like every other portion of the day's proceedings, the lecture was a great success.

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

49, Broad-street, Oxford, May 13, 1875.
Sir,—I herewith enclose a cheque for the Pedals and Action, duly received. I must say that I am very much pleased with them. I have easily fixed the Pedals with the aid of your printed instructions. Return receipt and oblige—Yours respectfully,
To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol. F. W. J. CHAUNDY.

4, Rose Cottages, South Norwood Hill, London, May 24, 1875.
Sir,—I enclose a P.O. Order for the Pedals and Action, and am exceedingly pleased with the easy and ingenious manner of attaching the Pedals to the Pianoforte Keys. It all works well.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
JULY 1, 1875.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

By HENRY C. LUNN.

I RECOLLECT once being told by a celebrated Professor that in his classes there was always one pupil who profited by every lesson, and that was himself. So conscientious an admission as this is indeed rare from one constantly engaged in tuition; but all who know how much more difficult it is to teach than to learn must feel that every year adds to their store of experience, and cannot but admire the genuineness of the reply given by an eminent pianist to a lady, who applied to him for "finishing" lessons, that "he would be happy to do his best, but that he had not yet finished himself." The truth is that, as a rule, although persons may admit the necessity of bestowing time and attention upon the acquisition of an art, they do not consider that an almost equal amount of time and attention is necessary to study how to convey a knowledge of that art to others; and thus it is that, trading upon the ignorance of parents and guardians who desire that those entrusted to their care shall "learn music," showy pianists, unformed singers, and shallow theorists often make a better income than those who have always zealously laboured to place their pupils in the right path, unmoved by the gentle admonitions directly or indirectly conveyed to them during their course of instruction. Let the truth not be disguised that at many private seminaries Professors of music are engaged, not because they are talented and hold a high position in the world of art, but because they can "introduce a pupil." At others, ladies who have studied music as an accomplishment are themselves the proprietors and teachers of the establishment, placing, however, the name of an eminent player or singer in the prospectus, at ruinous terms, if such instruction "be desired;" and at some schools it is well known that so little is music regarded that even those who send their daughters there are not aware by whom they are taught. To enlarge therefore upon the utter want of musical knowledge displayed by the majority of amateurs whilst the opportunities for acquiring it are so limited, would be manifestly absurd; but a few observations upon the subjects most commonly ignored or misunderstood in early training may perhaps meet the eyes of those who select Professors, or have them selected for them, and lead them to make enquiries before committing a pupil to their charge.

In the first place, as our hands are not formed for the Pianoforte, it is obvious that we have to form them. Four fingers and a thumb are not easily brought under such perfect subjection as to ensure equality of execution, without a long course of diligent and patient study; and at the commencement, therefore, it is as necessary to be taught how to hold our fingers over the key-board, in order to play, as to be taught how to hold our pen over the paper in order to write. It is true that the fingers may be dabbed down on the key-board, so as to produce a sound, as the pen may be dashed on the paper to produce a mark; but the intelligent master foresees the necessity of preparing for rapid execution in the one case, and for rapid writing in the other, and will not therefore allow a pupil to commence in a position which he knows to be a wrong one. Seeing that the thumb is short, strong, and separated from the fingers, like an unruly child, it will unquestionably baffle all attempts at discipline, if vigorous measures be not adopted at first. "Five finger exercises" are all very well if practised in all keys, and so that a coin placed upon the hand shall remain undisturbed; but if the thumb be allowed to slide off the key-board, and remain there until it is wanted again, how long will it be before the four fingers can be joined with a fifth? "Practising the scales" every day is usually considered as easy a matter as going out to take a walk; but the truth is that it requires a trained ear to detect whether two consecutive notes, even, are played with precisely the same tone. How much more difficult then to play three, and pass the thumb under upon a fourth without the slightest perceptible jerk to the player or listener; and yet this is what children are permitted to attempt, either without any supervision at all, or under the direction of a Governess who, although a "brilliant pianist" has never perhaps studied even the elements of the art she professes to teach. No wonder, then, that "playing the scales" is too often regarded by children as a sort of treadmill for the fingers, to which they are condemned for the crime of being young; and the fact of their ardently longing for the time of their emancipation is pretty evident from their almost invariably ignoring scale practice as soon as they possibly can; indeed I was once told by a pianist of the ripe age of thirteen, that her little sister "ran up her scales," but that she had "got beyond them." That in the majority of schools the great aim is to "play fast" may be proved by the number of Exercises for "velocity," and the very few for "equality," which are used; and as rapid music, with juvenile players, always generates rapid practice, there can be no wonder why the touch is often irretrievably destroyed at an age when it should be steadily in the process of formation. All this is, of course, bad enough; and hard, indeed, is the task of the master who is called upon in after years to "finish" what has never been commenced; but when we consider the blank state of the young pupil's mind upon the principles of the art on leaving school, it would in truth be strange, even supposing that her executive powers had been carefully trained, if she could give the slightest meaning to the simplest piece until she had been, bar by bar, coached up in it by a teacher who would continue to think for her. Such a statement may seem strange to many; but I speak from experience, and an official investigation on the subject (which must some day come) will prove that at numerous Educational Establishments where the highest terms are paid, the pupils, who have for years scrambled through pieces in imitation of the manner in which they have heard them performed by their master, are utterly ignorant of what key they are playing in, the value of notes and rests, the various species of time, the merest rudiments of phrasing, or the correct method of executing any one of the various embellishments to be met with in the simplest composition.

And now, to take these subjects in the order here mentioned, I would ask how any accurate knowledge is to be gained by the method in which they are usually attempted to be taught in schools. A pupil is told to look at the signature of a piece in order to know what key it is in, and always to believe that it is in a major key, unless she finds that the fifth (which is not the fifth, but the seventh) is continually raised. Of course, if she had never been "taught" there would be some hope for her, as she would then have no confused ideas about the "relative minor," and simply name the note upon which the whole piece is founded, reckoning whether the third from it is large or small. Beethoven's Sonata pathétique, for example, would be said by any child to be "in C" (if she were not tempted by her "teaching" to say that it is in E flat major), and it would then require but small calculation to find that the third is minor, according to the signature. That the minor key is constructed out of the materials used for what is termed its "relative major" is a matter of musical history, with which a pupil should have nothing to do at first. The fact is, that in modern music the question should be whether a piece is in a certain tonic major or minor, and it is absurd to suppose that there is any difficulty in determining this. Granted that by adopting this method we get rid of many time-honoured notions inseparably bound up with obsolete scales, we at least teach in accordance with the age we live in; and from experience I can say that I never heard a young pupil succeed in naming the key by adhering to the old system, and never heard her fail by following the new.

Were we to see a child throwing down shillings, sixpences, florins, half-crowns, and threepenny pieces in a heap upon the table, and, without noticing their relative differences, pettishly exclaiming that she "cannot make up a pound's worth of silver," we should certainly reprove her and say that her task will be hopeless unless she patiently counts the precise value of each piece of money, and thoroughly understands the fact that twenty shillings make a pound. Yet this is what is daily going on at many of our schools with notes instead of coins. Minims, crotchets, quavers, dots, double dots, rests, &c., convey no idea to the performer, because she has never been taught from the first to count them; and when, thoroughly disheartened, she exclaims that she "never can play in time," she really means that her experiment of ascertaining the value of notes without counting them has been unsuccessful. To help her over this difficulty, and make both herself and her parents believe that she is "getting on," the passages are often played to her, and her imitation of what she hears (like a drawing "touched up" by the master) passes with those who know no better as the result of the excellent teaching she is receiving. Counting, in learning to play, like spelling, in learning to read, is merely a means to an end; and an experienced performer, therefore, can dispense with the first, as an experienced reader can dispense with the second: but both are necessary in early training; and were a child taught that the value of a note is as important as its pitch, no misapprehension on the subject could ever occur: indeed it may be said that any young player who pursues the method of carefully counting every note and rest will find that the real difficulty is to play out of time.

Coming now to the subject usually headed in instruction-books "The various species of time," it can scarcely be imagined that much sound knowledge can exist upon the matter, considering that, in reality, it has nothing whatever to do with the "time" in which a piece is to be played, but merely relates to the measure, or rhythm. As the word itself, then, conveys no meaning to students, it is not likely that the two figures usually placed at the commencement will help them in doing more than arriving at a knowledge of the number of notes contained in a bar; so that 2 means 2, 6 means 6, 12 means 12, and 9 means 9; the rhythm (of course represented by the grouping, which is utterly ignored) being, although the most important matter, scarcely spoken of. Ask a child what 6.8 time is, and you will be told (if she remember the words she has been taught) that it is six quavers in the bar, which is of course like saying that 6.8 signifies 6.8. Tell her that it has two beats in the bar, and she will wonder what you mean; for she will of course imagine that six quavers, made up anyhow, must be 6.8 time. All this false teaching arises from the fact of the quantity instead of the measure (in "compound time," as it is termed) being represented by the upper of the two figures. Were it ever the custom to teach that you may take four, two or three notes of any kind in the bar—that when these notes are without dots they must each move in twos, and when with dots they must move in threes, there would be nothing more to learn, for the licence of writing triplets in simple time is known to every child. That any young pupil will arrive at this fact herself I am inclined to doubt, for in the little teaching she has had, the truth (as far as compound time at least is concerned) is carefully hidden. How, for instance, can she discover that 6.4 or 6.8 is merely moving in two triplets in the bar, in the same time as two doublets, when she is impressed with the conviction that, in all cases, a "dot after a note makes it half as long again?"

Were pupils taught to unbar their music in order to get at the phrasing intended by the composer, they would at once be able to sing with their fingers as they should sing with the voice; but whilst the lingering notion prevails that the bar-lines do more than regulate the measure, there can be little hope of any clear ideas on the subject. To finger a passage as you phrase it, it is necessary to know how you should phrase it; and although this is clearly enough expressed upon the paper, we rarely find that pupils do more than imitate the master, because they are not taught those principles which can ever make the music come from themselves. Take, for instance, the second subject in Beethoven's Sonata in G minor (Op. 49, No. 1)—a well-known school piece—and were it taught as a child would be taught to read a book—in phrases instead of single notes—it could be fingered in no other way than with the fourth finger on the first F in the second bar, and the thumb on the next F, because the first ends a phrase and the second begins one; but the pupil who even fingers it correctly, having no reason for so doing, plays both F's with precisely the same touch, because all she knows is what she has been told—that the "principal accent takes place on the first of the bar," and can scarcely comprehend that the beginning or end of a phrase can occur in any part of the bar that the composer pleases: indeed that the first note of a bar is often the last note of a phrase never enters the mind, and the listener therefore hears each sentence chopped up into bars, precisely as he often hears a beautiful piece of poetry chopped up into lines, the measure, of course, with untrained pupils, in both instances taking precedence of, and therefore obscuring, the sense.

The manner of performing the numerous embellishments in the music both of the past and present time is so little systematised in teaching that the pupils seem left to grope out a method for themselves; so that turns and shakes are usually played rather as interruptions than as ornaments to the flow of a passage. Appoggiaturas, too, are often performed as acciaccaturas, and acciaccaturas as appoggiaturas; indeed in the majority of Instruction Books the two are positively confounded together. If this ignorance then exist in the teacher, how can we wonder at the ignorance of the pupil? Turns, direct and inverted, over notes and over dots; shakes, beats, &c., are no doubt easily explained, but they are more easily played, by the master; and a pupil generally prefers hearing a thing done to being told the theory of doing it.

Of course I could extend these observations to a much greater length—for the theme is sufficiently fertile—but my object, as I have already said, is simply to draw the attention of those who have the care of young people, to the manner in which much of the musical education in this country is now conducted. The day may come when the possession of a diploma, granted by competent authorities, shall be considered—as in the medical profession—the only proof of thorough competence; but this time has not yet arrived, and it behoves parents and guardians, therefore, to think for themselves in the matter, and to exercise a little care in the choice of masters for a branch of education which is now rapidly ceasing to be treated, even in fashionable society, as a mere showy accomplishment. A sound musical training should be guaranteed in every establishment of any position; and this cannot be expected whilst either apathy or ignorance is permitted or overlooked at the lessons; for to ensure steady and satisfactory progress in the pupil, it is necessary that the master shall not only teach all he knows, but that he shall know all he teaches.

A RECENT ballad concert at Liverpool has brought the "encore" system to a crisis, which may, we hope, lead to some salutary reform. Mr. Sims Reeves, after singing "Tom Bowling," was of course called upon to repeat it: five times he came on the platform to acknowledge the applause, but those who had resolved to make their favourite vocalist do double work were not to be thus baulked. They refused to listen to Miss Brousil, who attempted to play a violin solo; they hissed and hooted Mr. Pyatt, who, after endeavouring to obtain a hearing, led Miss Brousil from the platform; and it was not until several of the audience, who were content to accept the programme as it was offered to them, had left the room in disgust, that anything like order was restored. Now certainly if a body of persons were, from any other cause, by persistent noisy demonstrations to prevent an entertainment from proceeding, they would be forcibly ejected from the room by the police; and we really can see no reason why the "encore" nuisance should differ from any other nuisance. We much regret that concert-givers have not the courage to abolish the system of repetitions altogether; but if this cannot be, it would be good if the matter were brought into a police-court, so that a magistrate might decide whether persons who purchase tickets to hear a concert are to have their enjoyment marred by the clamour of those who presume upon a supposed right to have any pieces they please over again.

THE conference respecting the proposed National Training School of Music, convened by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House on the 15th ult., may be described as a thoroughly commercial gathering, the Lord Mayor, the representatives of various City Companies, and others presumed to have the power of either giving or raising funds, having been invited to help in founding a scholarship in the school for the City of London. As no artists were present, it is not to be wondered at that the fact of a National School of Music, incorporated by Royal Charter, and under the patronage of Her Majesty, already existing, was not even mentioned. In justice to those who spoke upon the subject, however, it should be stated that they frankly owned they knew nothing about it—this ignorance being admitted by the Archbishop of Canterbury somewhat to stand in his way when granting degrees in the science—and we may therefore live in hope that, should the new Training School become a success in a pecuniary sense, somebody who not only does know something about music, but who has earned the confidence of the public, may be put forward as an earnest of the stability of the Institution in an artistic point of view.

THE musical performance given by the pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind at Dudley House—kindly lent for the occasion by the Earl and Countess of Dudley—was exceedingly interesting. The gathering included many aristocratic patrons of the College; and when we say that during the afternoon the subscriptions received included £1,000 from the Duke of Westminster (President of the Institution) and £500 from the Earl of Dudley, it will be seen that the practical results of the meeting were in the highest degree satisfactory. The establishment of an Institution in which the musical talent of the youthful blind shall be carefully cultivated reflects the utmost honour upon its promoters; but we confess that we should like to hear to whom the musical direction of this College is confided, and also who are the professors engaged.

THE recent discussion in the House of Commons upon the subject of the proposed Opera House on the Thames Embankment, proves that our legislators are fully alive to the necessity of providing the fashionable musical world with a building which shall do credit to the nation. Yet, when the encouragement of the art in England is pressed upon the attention of the House, every effort is made to ignore the necessity of any governmental recognition of the matter. Musical education may struggle on by the help of private patronage, or die out altogether; but what a dreadful thing it would be if Mr. Mapleson were compelled to place the new Opera House "sideways."

WE have received during the month, "for review," a piece of music entitled, "A Sank(t)ey-monious Set of Quadrilles; founded on a 'Revival' of the most approved Haymarket Melodies, ancient and modern; by one of the 'Devil's Own.'" As we can scarcely consider the forwarding of such a production to a musical journal to be intended as a joke, and are charitable enough to believe that it is not intended as an insult, we cannot but express our astonishment at the low estimate which some persons entertain of the duty of a reviewer; and beg to assure both the composer and publisher of this elegant piece that we have quoted its title, not with the intention of advertising it, but solely to prove to our readers that such things are engraved, published, and circulated.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

ALTHOUGH always loth to institute comparisons when criticising the operatic doings at our two lyrical establishments, we cannot avoid throwing aside our usual custom in noticing the production of "Lohengrin" at Her Majesty's Opera, more especially as the two lessees, after ignoring the works of Wagner season after season, have thought proper to enter into fierce rivalry by bringing forward the same Opera in the same year. It would certainly have been infinitely more satisfactory to those who, having no sympathy with managerial tactics, desire only that the art creations of a composer who has been so much talked of should have been placed in the fairest manner before an English audience, if, after becoming partially acquainted with the "Flying Dutchman," an opportunity had been afforded of hearing "Tannhäuser" at one house, and "Lohengrin" at the other. But as this could not be, we must be thankful for what we get; and having said all we have to say upon the music of "Lohengrin" on its production at Covent Garden, we have now only to record our impression of the points of difference in the rendering of the work at Drury Lane. In the first place, then, we must mention the immeasurable superiority of Mdlle. Titiens over Mdlle. D'Angeri in the part of Ortruda. Both in her singing and acting this great artist proved that even in so thankless a character, and in music which certainly does not help her to enlist the sympathies of her audience, she could as securely calculate upon producing her effect as when representing a part into which the composer has thrown the main interest of his Opera. Neither Madame Christine Nilsson's Elsa nor Signor Campanini's Lohengrin pleased us so much as we anticipated from what we knew of both these vocalists in other parts. Madame Nilsson sang in many portions charmingly —especially in the scene with Ortruda, and in the great duet in the nuptial chamber—but to us, at least, there appeared a coldness, a self-consciousness, which made her seem to stand outside the picture, even in the scene with Lohengrin just mentioned, where with an impulsive energy which elicited a round of applause, she wrings the secret from her lover. Signor Campanini sang well; but seemed to struggle with the music throughout, and to be glad when it was over. His "Farewell to the Swan" was given with a throaty quality of voice which much marred the effect; and although some of the more impassioned parts were well delivered, he was throughout too much of the modern Italian tenor to realise a Wagnerite's conception of the Knight of the Swan. Signor Galassi was excellent throughout the trying part of Frederick, and the somewhat ungracious music of the King was well given by Herr Behrens. Signor Costa, too, was on the whole satisfactory in his declamation as the Herald, considering the difficulty of sustaining his many long holding notes perfectly in tune. The choruses were much better sung than at the rival establishment; but there can be no question that for anything like an adequate rendering of them we must wait for a German company. Either the rehearsals are insufficient, or a long course of Italian opera choruses has so precluded the possibility of doing justice to a severer style that a coarse approximation to the ideal of Wagner is all we can hope for. The accompaniments were steadily played, but the brass instruments throughout were so loud as seriously to interfere with the general effect. The introduction to the third act was marred by being taken too slowly, as was also, to a great extent, the Bridal chorus. In every respect the Opera was placed upon the stage in a manner which reflected the utmost credit upon the management, the scenery of Mr. William Beverley being a most attractive feature. Sir Michael Costa has certainly exercised the privilege—accorded to him by the composer—of "cutting" the music with a somewhat merciless hand. In some parts the excised portions may well be spared, but in others the gap was too apparent to pass unnoticed, even by those who do not pertinaciously cling to every note the composer has written. The singers and Sir Michael Costa were called upon the stage at the conclusion of the acts; but the Germans kept order, as at Covent Garden, during the performance of the Opera, and not only were calls for encores repressed, but the action of the scene was never allowed to be interrupted by the curtseying and bowing of singers in acknowledgment of undue bursts of applause. If we gain nothing else from the advent of Wagner in England, let us at least heartily thank him for this.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE return of M. Faure to this establishment has materially strengthened the cast of many of the Operas which have been given during the month, his reception we need scarcely say being as enthusiastic as ever. Mdlle. Zaré Thalberg has unwisely, we think, been put forward as Cherubino, in Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro." Her singing has of course many charms; but experience is wanting for the due rendering of a character which we have been accustomed to see represented by our greatest artists; and it is false policy to compel an audience to draw comparisons. The house has been well attended, and "Lohengrin" remains highly attractive, Signor Carpi having been well received in the title part, although he can scarcely be accepted as a satisfactory substitute for Signor Nicolini. The season is announced to terminate on the 17th inst.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE performance of Signor Papini—who chose for the display of his exceptionally artistic qualities the Adagio and Rondo from Vieuxtemps's violin Concerto in E—was the feature of the fifth concert; and we must also mention the successful appearance of Mr. W. Shakspeare as a vocalist. This gentleman was gradually making a name as a pianist and composer at the concerts of the Royal Academy of Music; but has been lately studying singing in Germany. His rendering of Sterndale Bennett's "Dawn, gentle flower," was better than that of Rossini's "Ecco Ridente," but in both he evidenced the possession of undoubted talent, and was warmly applauded. Raff's pianoforte Concerto (Op. 185) was well played by Mr. Alfred Jaell at the sixth concert, the programme of which also included Benedict's Overture composed for the Liverpool Festival in 1849. At the seventh concert, on the 21st ult., a selection from Sullivan's "Tempest" music was given, and cordially received. Signor Lodovico Breitner's performance of Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto in G proved his perfect command of the key-board; and in spite of a certain hardness of touch, no doubt fostered by the music of the Liszt school, he elicited the most enthusiastic marks of approbation. The vocal music was entrusted solely to Mdlle. Varesi, who created a marked effect in the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah.

WE regret sincerely to announce the death of Mr. Robert Barnby, which occurred, after a short illness, on the 1st ult., at his residence, St. George's Square, Pimlico. Mr. Barnby was a Gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapels-Royal, and a lay vicar of Westminster Abbey, both which positions he had held for many years, and was highly respected, not only for his artistic abilities, but for his private worth. At the annual service of the London Church Choir Association in Westminster Abbey, Dean Stanley, in his sermon, after alluding to the responsibility which rested upon all engaged in conducting the services of the Church, and especially upon the members of the choir, referred to the sad event in these words:—"If, like the departed member of the Abbey choir who was yesterday laid in his grave, any were able to fulfil perfectly not only his choral duties, but, as he did, his domestic duties towards wife and child, and brother, they could trace in such harmonies of home the sweetest music of a redeemed soul." In testimony of the esteem which he had earned in the exercise of his duties during so lengthened a period, we may also quote from the sermon of the Precentor, the Rev. S. Flood Jones, preached in the Abbey on the 6th ult.:—"It is only a month," he said, "or even less, ago, since he, whose departure the services of to-day commemorate, was in his own place and at his own work. Thirty years and more of connection with this Abbey proved his efficiency. Thirty years, in which no penalty for wilful non-attendance ever fell upon him. Thirty years, in which he most diligently performed his own duties, and gave good and ready help to others. You, his brethren in this choir, have shown your great respect for him by gathering almost to a man around his grave. With our friend and brother who has gone 'the old order changeth.' Only one now lives who was a lay-vicar of this Abbey when Robert Barnby was admitted to its choir. The names which then made Westminster renowned are now living only in distant memories; but the work is still before us. The great characteristic of our friend who has gone was, that he was always, as it were, in church; hastening from services here to services elsewhere, with repetitions of the same words and acts, that can hardly be healthful to mind or body or soul. And now, with him, 'the old order changeth.' He served his own generation by the will of God, and has fallen asleep. Let us hope and believe that his power of song is not for ever hushed and stayed, but is to be exercised in that higher and holier sphere, where prayer can have no place, but where praise abideth for ever. Here, among us, he 'did what he could;' and we miss his help and skill, and his musical taste, and his lingering traditions of the olden days. Let us each do what we can, and we shall not have lived in vain. In the words of one erewhile our Dean (Dr. Trench), the trusted friend of him who, as Dean also of this Abbey (Bishop Wilberforce), presented our brother whom we miss to-day, to his place and office in our choir—

'If we our Guide obey,
The dreariest path, the darkest way,
Shall issue out in heavenly day:
And we, on divers shores now cast,
Shall meet, our perilous voyage past,
All in our Father's home at last!'"

At a meeting of the Noblemen and Gentlemen's Catch Club (of which the deceased was a member), his Grace the Duke of Beaufort passed a well-deserved eulogium upon Mr. Barnby, having known him, as he stated, for the last thirty years, and feeling for him the highest esteem. At the funeral, which took place in Highgate Cemetery, a large number of professional and other friends assembled to pay the last respect to the departed artist, and the service was most impressively read by the Rev. S. Flood Jones. Mr. Barnby was but fifty-four years of age at the time of his decease.

MR. E. SILAS gave an evening concert at St. George's Hall on the 17th ult., before a highly appreciative audience. The principal attraction was a Trio by the concert-giver "for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte," as the composer modestly prints it in the programme, although we can scarcely see why the instrument of which Mr. Silas is so perfect a master should not have been, according to custom, placed first. The writing in this composition is of the highest order and the themes so attractive as to win the sympathies of every listener. The second movement—strangely called "Intermezzo"—was enthusiastically and deservedly encored: it is full of character, and pleased so much that we believe many amongst the audience would have willingly heard it a third time. The "Adagio" is a stream of beautiful melody, the passages for each instrument being charmingly woven in rather for general effect than for the display of the individual performer; and the Finale, although perhaps not quite equal to the movements which precede it, is vivacious and effective. The applause at the conclusion of the work was loud and prolonged, and the composer —who was ably supported by Messrs. Holmes (violin) and Pezze (violoncello)—was warmly greeted. Mr. Silas also performed several minor pieces with his usual success—displaying in each that refined touch and facile execution which invariably characterise his playing—and the vocal music was well rendered by Miss Nessie Goode, Miss Butterworth, and Mr. Lithgow James; Miss Goode giving with much effect a ballad called "Polly Vanderdecken," by Mr. Silas, which contains all the elements of popularity.

A COLLEGE OF CHURCH MUSIC.—The Institution hitherto known as "The Church Choral Society and College of Church Music" has been incorporated by special licence under Act of Parliament, with the title of Trinity College, London. The Corporation consists of twenty persons called "Members of Council," who administer the affairs of the college, which has two departments, entitled respectively the Academical and Choral divisions. This latter department is in fact the old "Church Choral Society," and the corporation retains to itself the right to continue to apply that title to the choral division, local branches of which are being established in the various districts of London. The management of the academical division is delegated to an academical board, which is empowered by the college statutes to grant diplomas of efficiency in music, on examination, to "male members of the Church of England as by law established, or of any Church in communion therewith." Attached to this thereis a proviso, that of the examiners "one at least shall have graduated in music at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, or London." The college year is divided into four terms, viz., Lent, Trinity, Michaelmas, and Christmas; and the examinations, which must be public, can be held (not oftener than) once in each term. Of the diplomas there are at present to be three classes, as heretofore:—1. Senior Choral Fellows, who are examined in sight-singing, management of voice (the quality of voice not being taken into consideration), choir-training, harmony and counterpoint in not more than five parts, and musical history, all with especial reference to Church music. 2. Choral Fellows, who pass in the same subjects, excepting that the paper work is simpler in character, and limited to four parts. 3. Choral Associates, who are required to pass only in sight-singing and management of the voice. When the necessary arrangements can be made, qualified professors are to be appointed to lecture on subjects connected with music as a science and art. The college authorities also hope in course of time to establish a number of prizes and other inducements to candidates, in furtherance of the object they have in view—the improvement of Church music, and of Church musicians as a class.

THE list of prizes and certificates in Music granted by Mr. John Hullah at the Society of Arts Examinations has just been published. The first prize is taken by Mr. D. McGhie, and the second by Mr. W. Millar, both of Glasgow. The ladies' prize is awarded to Miss Louise Dickes, of London. The total number of certificates granted is 131, as against 102 last year. The two prizemen are both Tonic Sol-faists, as are also 75 out of the 131 who receive certificates.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us the following:—"Unquestionably the most advantageous place to erect an organ is as our cathedral organs were, in which case there is nothing to absorb the sound, and the tone distributes itself in the manner designed by One wiser than we poor puny creatures. The next best place is doubtless the end of the centre aisle, after which the better plan is to place the organ in a transept open to the ceiling or roof. It may be said that if the theory I state as to the original position of a cathedral organ be correct, how is it that in the present day we have so many removals of the organ from the organ screen? My ideas on this point are as follows:—At the period when all our cathedrals were built the clergy had a musical education. At the time the organs were first erected on the screen the only body of men who were learned in music was the clergy—after a time a race of architects came into existence, who esteemed music a noise, and an organ an eyesore. After a time people wanted organs of more importance. The organ builder then, instead of availing himself of the advantages of the screen to hide his organ in, gave the architect something bigger to talk down. The clergy, at the period I am now come to, are no longer educated in music, no longer taught what music really is. The architect now, in some instances, gets the object he aims for. In the present day how rare is it to find one of the clergy with musical knowledge; yet if one of the latter picks up only a smattering of this science, do not his brethren quote him as a great authority? I have at this moment in my mind's eye one such—one gifted by nature with a fine voice—one who can talk well on music and other subjects; yet the moment he tries to intone, or do anything else in which he has not been taught, he cuts a very sorry figure; yet if this gentleman had been instructed by a clever man he would (or might still, if he would learn) intone well. If a clever barrister be instructed by a more than ordinarily clever surgeon in a case, he could make one believe that he was learned in surgery, and his instructor nothing in comparison to himself. I name this to show how we may be carried away and believe in the talker in preference to the thinker. That the clergy universally were masters in the sciences of both music and medicine, history teaches us,

That is the reason why the archbishops (and I believe the bishops of our church also) being known to be duly qualified to judge, were invested with the power of creating, at pleasure, any one they chose, either a doctor of medicine or a doctor of music. This power has never yet been repealed. I have known of instances wherein men by archbishops have been made doctors of music (in one instance I can name a lawyer's clerk who was created a doctor of music); but I know of no instance in modern times wherein a dignitary of the church has created any one a doctor of medicine. Doubtless if the power still existing was put in force for the latter purpose, the evil would become generally known and prevented from being repeated. Thus the clergy were originally the parish doctors. It would doubtless have added to the love between an incumbent and his parishioners had the clergy kept up their learning in medicine, and performed the duties I name, which in ancient times their predecessors did; moreover, I doubt much if there would be so much dissent as there is. Had the clergy in Ireland kept up their learning in this science (medicine), and performed their duties to the poor in the way their ancient predecessors did, I much doubt whether the Irish Church would in our time have been disestablished. I believe also that, had our clergy maintained their love for, and pre-eminence in, the science of music, none of our cathedral organs would have been removed from the place they occupied. Supposing henceforth our clergy were required to be properly instructed in music, and that the same were a sine quâ non prior to ordination, might it not lead to the replacement of some of our cathedral organs in their original position?"

THE Corporation of Manchester has decided upon having a great clock and carillons for the magnificent new Town-hall, and have selected Messrs. Gillett and Bland, of the Clock Factory, Croydon, to carry out the work. The clock is to strike the hours upon a bell of seven tons, and to chime the four quarters on eight bells, the time to be shown upon four 16ft. illuminated dials. An automatic gas apparatus will be fitted to the clock for turning the gas up and down, and so constructed as to suit all seasons of the year. The clock will also have an electric connection with the Royal Observatory at Greenwich. The carillon machine, on Gillett and Bland's improved patented system, is to play 31 tunes (a fresh tune for every day in the month) on 17 bells weighing altogether about 30 tons, and will also have barrels for changes similar to ringing a peal and an ivory key-board, the same as a pianoforte, attached to the machine, so that any musician can play tunes upon the bells with the fingers as easily as playing a pianoforte or organ. Taken altogether, this will be the largest work of the kind in the United Kingdom, and will cost about £7,000. The seven-ton hour-bell will be the largest struck upon by a clock in this country excepting Westminster, and two tons heavier than the one at St. Paul's. The bells will be cast by Messrs. Taylor.

THE second concert of the Welsh Choral Union was given on the 31st May, at St. James's Hall, Mendelssohn's music to "Athalie" forming the first part of the programme. The choir was strengthened by some of the students of the Royal Academy of Music, and the solo vocalists—Miss Mary Davies, R.A.M., Miss Lydia Elsmore, and Miss Purdy—were thoroughly efficient. The reading of so much of the text as is necessary to make the several musical pieces intelligible was entrusted to Mr. Charles Fry, whose elocutionary powers appear to be gradually obtaining that recognition which we some time ago predicted; and the pianoforte duet accompaniment was skilfully played by Messrs. Puddicombe and W. W. Bampfylde, strengthened by a septet of harps. The second part was miscellaneous, and included many specimens of the Welsh adaptations of Mr. John Thomas, the conductor, all of which were received with much favour. The "Athalie" music was ably directed by Mr. John Thomas.

THE ninth concert of the Amateur Musical Union was given at Willis's Rooms on the 16th ult., with decided success. Much credit is due to the Union for selecting a portion of Schumann's fine setting of the scenes from "Faust" for performance, the dramatic power and poetical feeling displayed in this music making all unacquainted with its beauties wonder how it could be that such a work should be so utterly neglected in this country. On the whole the rendering of both the solo and choral parts was highly creditable, and the pianoforte accompaniments were excellently played. Weber's "Jubilee" Cantata was afterwards given with equal success.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS'S earnest and interesting lecture upon National Music, delivered at St. George's Hall on the 27th May, under the presidency of Lord Clarence Paget, deserves honourable mention from all desirous of promoting a knowledge of the history of the art amongst the general public. Certainly the illustrations—excellently rendered by Miss Marian Williams, Miss Mary Davies and Miss Lizzie Evans—were a powerful attraction; but, unlike many similar entertainments we have attended, they did not draw the attention away from the main subject of the discourse, but rather served to heighten the force of the lecturer's remarks. Mr. Richards was warmly applauded during the progress of his reading; and we trust that he may be emboldened by his success to repeat his lecture frequently in the metropolis.

THE "Grand Italian Concerts" at the Alexandra Palace have been highly attractive to those whose musical taste has not grown beyond such heterogeneous entertainments; but we must remind the Directors that they are behind the fashion, for at the Crystal Palace such concerts have been abandoned in favour of the performance of those solid works which have built up the musical fame of the Sydenham Palace. The orchestra, under Mr. Weist Hill, is thoroughly efficient; and although the pieces selected have not been of a very high order, their execution was everything that could be desired. The Hall is by no means well adapted for sound, and we cannot therefore but wonder that songs with a pianoforte accompaniment should be ventured upon.

THE present season of the Aldermanbury Musical Society terminated with a Soirée Musicale, at the Mart, Tokenhouse-yard, Lothbury, on Monday evening, the 7th ult., under the direction of Mr. E. Craig, the conductor. An excellent programme was provided, and encores were awarded to Miss Stiles, Miss Wood, Miss Easterbrook, Mr. Harris and Mr. Markham, the Hon. Sec. Accompanist, Mr. Fisher; solo pianoforte, Herr Lehmeyer, who performed several selections in his usual masterly manner.

ON Thursday evening, the 27th May, Mr. T. H. Wright delivered a lecture on "The History of Bardism—the National Songs of Wales, and the Music of the Harp," before the members of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts. Mr. Wright treated his subject in a most exhaustive manner, demonstrating the intimate connection between music and freedom in the early period of Welsh Nationality. Several of the pieces selected by the lecturer as illustrations to his text were loudly applauded, as were also the songs, given with much taste and expression by Madame Harriette Lee.

AT the June concert of the St. George's Glee Union on the 4th ult., the choir was heard in "Now is the month," "Ye spotted snakes," "To Thee, Great Lord," "Who shall win?" and "Hunting Song" (Mendelssohn). Miss Janet King sang "Tell me, my heart" and "Why throbs" ("Lurline"). Miss Marian Cecil, who made her first appearance, has a good contralto voice, and was well received. Mr. Williams sang "Myrrha" (B. Tours), and Mr. Odell gave a Cavatina from "Lucrezia Borgia," and also played two pianoforte solos with much effect. Mr. Thomas Garside conducted.

MR. JOHN THOMAS'S Harp Concert took place at St. James's Hall on the 24th ult., when he was assisted by Miss E. Wynne, Mdlle. Angèle, Miss J. Wigan (who replaced Mdlle. Gaetano), Mdlle. Enriquez, Mr. Shakspeare, Mr. Tessemann and Mr. L. Thomas. Mr. Cusins contributed a pianoforte solo, and joined the concert-giver in a duet for pianoforte and harp; and a violin solo was successfully rendered by Mdlle. Castellan. Mr. Thomas's own performances received the hearty applause of his audience.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Corelli's Sarabande and Gigue, in E minor.
Corelli's Allemande, Sarabande and Gavotte, in F.

Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Jules Brissac.

NOW that the taste for the sound and healthy music of the old masters is rapidly growing, it is not likely that the compositions of Corelli will be permitted to die out. His violin pieces are not only full of vigour, but so overflowing with the ever attractive quality of tunefulness, that they will no doubt be as welcome in pianoforte transcriptions as when given forth by the instrument for which they were written. Jules Brissac has evidently a special faculty for reproducing the original effects upon our household instrument; indeed few listeners would ever guess that they were adaptations at all, so well do the passages lie under the hand. The Sarabande, in E minor, is charmingly melodious, and an excellent study for young players, the flowing bass, which is carefully fingered, being really good practice for the left hand. The Gigue is certain to become a favourite; and we cordially commend it to the attention of amateur pianists who have no objection to a "pretty" movement being also one of sterling worth. The Allemande, in F, has a graceful subject, the phrasing of the passages for the left hand, however, being so important a feature in the composition that none but those who have trained themselves in part-playing can give it due effect. Both the Sarabande and Gavotte are short, but they cannot fail to please, the Gavotte, especially, having a theme of much character. Transcriptions as good as these will be a real boon to those teachers who desire that their pupils should know something of the music of the past, as well as of the present and future.

No more Alone. Song. Words by J. Wilce. Composed by John Francis Barnett.

SONGS by composers who have already given ample proof that they are capable of producing works of a far higher character, are always certain to please the musician, although they may not be so popular in character as to be as remunerative to the musicseller as those of the mere song-makers of the day. Mr. Barnett's graceful vocal piece has a merit far above the average ballads, but the melody will hardly strike the uncultivated ear. It is, however, extremely vocal, and the accompaniments are written with the fluency of a practised hand. We especially like the temporary modulation into the relative minor in the third bar from the close. The song will no doubt prove effective in a public concert room, where it is likely to receive a more finished rendering than in a private drawing-room.

Luna. Song. Words by Meta Orred. Composed by Virginia Gabriel.

THE attractions of this composer's vocal works usually lie upon the surface, and the song before us is no exception to the rule. Without any particular trouble either to singer or accompanist, a certain effect is produced by this class of composition; and there can be little doubt that this fact will always ensure for such pieces a ready acceptance with amateurs. "Luna" has an appropriate melody; and the lazy chords in the opening phrases form just such an accompaniment as a person "afloat in a silver boat" might be expected to help the voice with. The staccato quavers in the pianoforte part and the change to the relative minor prevent undue monotony; and the song may be recommended to all in search of simple vocal music.

Before the Fight. Song. Words by Desmond Ryan. Composed by Ciro Pinsuti.

THIS is a bold and musicianlike song for a baritone voice, which can scarcely fail to become a favourite both in the concert-room and drawing-room. The staccato chords at the commencement of the voice part, and the flowing quavers which follow, seem called up naturally by the varied character of the words, which are extremely vigorous. We especially like the change from B flat minor to G flat major; and the return to the original key, by the emphasised quavers in the accompaniment, on the dominant harmony, is a good and effective point.

Ephemeral (Only a year ago, love). Song. The words by G. J. Whyte Melville. Music by Agnes Zimmermann.

AN expressive composition in A minor to some poetical verses, which certainly lend themselves well to musical treatment. The flowing semiquaver accompaniment is effectively woven in with the voice part, and a sympathetic accompanist will be required to do full justice to the composition. When we say that at the recent concert of Miss Zimmermann the song was given by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and that the composer was at the pianoforte, it may be imagined with what unanimity an encore was demanded.

Hark! The Nightingale is singing. Serenade for four voices. Poetry by Robert Crompton. Music by Stephen Stratton.

THIS part-song, dedicated to the Birmingham Glee Union, has already reached a second edition, which we presume may be accepted as a proof of its success. The theme is vocal and the parts are well written, an effective change from G to E flat giving much life to the composition. Without being rigid sticklers for the due expression of the verses in part-songs, however, we cannot believe that the voices should be allowed to come in upon any words required by the music, exactly as if the notes had been written first and the poetry cut into patches to suit them. The bass, for instance, says "Seems to woo thee forth to rove," and the three other voices enter on the words "thee forth to rove," having sung no portion of the line before. Again, three voices have the words "Glitter in the clear blue skies," and the bass only "in the clear blue skies." This is indeed making verses wait respectfully on the music. The song is written for alto, two tenors, and bass, and is well adapted for a trained choir such as that to which the composition is inscribed.

Hymns, Carols, and Moral Songs for the Young. By William Metcalfe.

GREAT care should be taken in writing "for the young" to adapt the thought and its expression to their immature intelligence, for first impressions are apt to leave an indelible mark on character and tastes. Impressionable as children are, with their eagerness to receive information, and their charming trustfulness, it especially behoves those who indirectly administer to their mental and moral culture, to reflect deeply on the principles that should guide such work before they offer to the choice of mothers the produce of their labours. To be successful in this direction one must be more than musician; the heart must have been moved and stimulated by direct contact with children, and beat in unison with the intellect for their benefit and advancement. Mr. Metcalfe writes with freedom and evident knowledge, but there are some things in his work which we cannot forbear to point out as faults or errors of judgment. In No. 7, besides consecutive 7ths in the second bar, an unpleasant progression occurs in the first bar of the third line, which has all the bad effects of 8ths between extreme parts. In No. 14, first bar of the second line, the pedal is quitted before it is a note of the harmony. The monotony of rhythm in No. 3, the eccentric harmonies in Nos. 8 and 28, the commonplace setting of very serious words in No. 39, occasional false accents, excessive modulation, the unaccountable way in which inner parts appear and vanish, are faults that Mr. Metcalfe may overcome. Though, however, we do not think the book suitable for its object, for it is certainly marred by faults, there are many capital hymn tunes and pieces of lighter character, particularly Nos. 16, 18, 20, 23, and 50, which show that Mr. Metcalfe is capable of writing music which may indeed be strong meat for babes, but will prove attractive to adults.

Contributions to the Hymnody of the Church.—Te Deum. By Rev. J. S. B. Hodges.

THE hymns which Mr. Hodges has set to music are, most of them at least, well known to all Anglicans, amongst them occurring such familiar poems as "For thee, oh dear, dear country," "Onward! Christian soldiers," and "My God, my Father, while I stray." The somewhat sentimental character of modern hymnody has necessarily induced a corresponding character in the music which springs from it, and Mr. Hodges has been thoroughly imbued with this spirit. It is difficult to select any conspicuous examples of merit in these contributions. The melodies are, as a rule, subservient to the sweet character of the harmonies, and there is a decided sameness throughout the series. Nos. 5, 14, and 17 please us most, but if Mr. Hodges contemplates further contributions, it would be well if he would forbear from making the tenor part habitually descend below the bass part in a previous chord. In No. 13 occur two cases of a 7th rising to the 5th, while the root descends to the 3rd of the next chord. If Mr. Hodges will consider the propriety of avoiding such errors in his future contributions, they will no doubt be welcomed with still greater favour by the many to whom this class of composition appeals. The Te Deum is a bright piece of music which entirely depends upon the organ part for its effect, the voices singing in unison. It will, therefore, be suitable only for churches which possess an instrument capable of carrying out the intention of the author.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

Eight Characteristic Pieces for the Pianoforte. 1. Minuetto; 2. Præludium; 3. Air; 4. Album Blatt; 5. Barcarole; 6. Papillon; 7. Andante Serioso; 8. Capriccio. Composed by Waldemar Bargiel.

THESE pianoforte pieces, although of small pretension, display an original power and a musicianlike skill sufficient to arrest the attention and to make us desire to cultivate a closer acquaintance with their composer. Nos. 1 and 2 are good solid sketches, artistically treated, the "Præludium" especially—in G minor, ending with the orthodox major chord—being exceedingly attractive. No. 3 is a charmingly written piece, an "Air" indeed, as its title affirms, but as pure a specimen of quiet melody and harmony as can be imagined, and an excellent study for legato playing. No. 4 has a melodious subject with a syncopated accompaniment, which, with a sympathetic performer, may be made extremely effective. No. 5, although not in the usual Barcarolle rhythm, 6-8, has an appropriate flowing theme, with a good second subject; and No. 6 has sufficient "Butterfly" character to justify its title, although we think it scarcely equal to its companions. In No. 7 we have a tranquil theme, in C minor, with a modulation into the tonic major; and No. 8 is a well-written Capriccio with some good and effective passages for both hands. All these sketches, as we have said, have sufficient individuality to lift them above the ordinary music of the day.

Caprice for the Pianoforte. By T. M. Mudie.

WE have on several former occasions called attention to the excessive refinement and poetical feeling displayed in Mr. Mudie's pianoforte works, which although tolerably voluminous, were they brought together in one catalogue, are by no means as well known as they deserve to be. The "Caprice" before us is written especially for moderately advanced players, and is eminently fitted to cultivate the taste for the due appreciation of compositions of the classical school. The themes are most attractive, and the writing throughout is that of a thorough master. All the passages lie well under the hand, but the due rendering of them will require mind as well as fingers. The publication of music like this should be warmly encouraged, for it has been too much the custom rather to write down to the level of the pupil than to endeavour to raise the pupil to the level of the music.

The Fairy Wedding. Duet for Soprano and Contralto. Words by Frederick Enoch. Music by Henry Smart.

THE musical verses of Mr. Enoch have been set with the usual success by Mr. Smart, and the result is a duet which cannot fail to prove highly effective for drawing-room performance. The melody is exceedingly attractive, and no vocal difficulties present themselves even to the most timid amateurs. Much character is given to the composition by the accompaniment, which is written throughout with all that grace and elegance which invariably distinguish the vocal pieces of this composer. There are short and melodious solos for both voices, so that, in the performance of the duet, the honours will be equally shared by each singer.

Are your minds set upon righteousness? Anthem. Dedicated to the Vicar and Choir of St. Stephen's, Lewisham. Composed by R. Stanley Brocklebank.

IT is impossible for us to speak favourably of this composition. It has the merit of being tolerably easy to sing, but the author must learn to write correctly harmony and notation. It is very often expedient to employ false notation to facilitate the reading of single parts, but it is manifestly incorrect and misleading to do so when no purpose is served. In the third bar of the introduction G♮ is written instead of F♯ in a chord which is the first inversion of a minor 9th or D. A similar fault occurring every time this or an analogous chord is written shows that the author is obstinate rather than politic in his view. Amongst other things too we must protest against the rising of the 7th of the dominant to the 5th of the tonic while the 3rd rises to the root. This occurs twice on pages 6 and 7, to the words "ponder, ponder," and "that dwell."

Benediction Service. By Charles W. Smith.

WE are not told where St. Joseph's Academy is situated to whose students this service is dedicated and for whom it was expressly composed, but we are convinced that this gushing kind of music which is becoming so general in the Roman Church, though it may attract, cannot have a good influence. If then attractiveness is the chief use, as it is the only merit, we can only wonder that the authorities at this academy sanction the production of such music in a place where the need of attraction is supposed to be no longer urgent. The piece under consideration is tuneful if commonplace, and we forbear to point out some faults of part-writing not knowing how far the author prefers progressions that are usually considered as signs of want of care or study.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

The Harvest Song (Herbstlied); Schumann. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by G. F. West.

AGAIN we must say that a "Transcription" is an adaptation of a composition for an instrument different to that for which it was originally written, and not a Fantasia upon a theme introducing showy variations. Mr. West writes graceful and useful school pieces; and beyond the objection to his title which we have offered, there can be no reason why the one before us should not be as acceptable as any he has yet put his name to. The manner in which the air is ornamented has certainly no claim to novelty; but the passages are brilliant, and well suited for moderately advanced players. We could wish, however, that the fingering were not so plentifully marked; in many parts it is quite unnecessary, and draws the attention away from the notes. The leading fingers only should be indicated, and there would be some chance then of a pupil being taught to think.

Poor Ellen. Song. Poetry by the Rev. E. Dudley Jackson. Composed by Ciro Pinsuti.

THE beautiful opening of this song, in E minor, tells the story of the forlorn maiden with much pathos, an appropriate accompaniment materially aiding the effect of the simple phrases to which the words are wedded. The change to the tonic major gives much intensity to the words "Poor Ellen, she's gone where no false tongues woo;" and an effect thoroughly sympathetic with the return to the verse expressive of weary waiting is gained by the recurrence to the minor. We cordially recommend this eloquent song to the attention of vocalists, both for public and private performance.

music" is becoming almost as plentiful as "drawing-room music;" and, from our experience, we may affirm that the former is—although less pretentious—very often infinitely superior to the latter. Some of our best composers have latterly turned their attention to juvenile songs, and our reviewing columns have proved that we consider them fully worthy of attention. The present collection appears entitled to a fair position amongst the many recent works of the kind. The words are just such as we should like to hear children sing—pure in thought and easily versified—and the music simple and tuneful enough to be readily caught up and remembered. Many of the airs are perhaps not very original—No. 1, for instance, reminding us somewhat too much of "The Minstrel Boy"—but they are all well adapted for their purpose, and the harmonies throughout are excellent. We can imagine that most of them will become favourites with young singers, but were we permitted to have a voice in the matter, we should especially mention the "Cradle Song," "Evening," "Spring Flowers," "The Holiday," "The Return of Spring," and "To the Woods."

Rejoice in the Lord. Anthem. By the Rev. William Statham, B.A.

THIS anthem is extracted from a quarterly publication "The Practical Choir Master," and is quite worthy to appear in its new shape. It is of a contrapuntal character throughout, carefully and thoroughly written, and welcome as an indication that amongst the clergy are to be found men who are willing and able to oppose sentimental novelties by work that is healthily traditional and well adapted for church use.

LAMBORN COCK.

First Sarabande, for the Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren.

AMONGST the many specimens of these old dance tunes, both of past and present composers, recently published, there can be no doubt that Mr. Macfarren's latest contribution will stand prominently forward. The quaint opening subject, in D minor, is so fresh and characteristic as thoroughly to revive the feeling of the "Sarabande" days; and the Cantabile theme in the tonic major is tuneful enough to make us regret that such graceful music should sound antiquated. It may be that, as we see many past fashions now the rage, much of the newest music may be cast in the oldest forms; and, if so, great credit must be given to the composer of the Sarabande before us, who has been one of the most earnest labourers in the good cause, and not only proved by his editions of the classical pieces what a mine of wealth has been for years neglected, but by his own compositions that there are writers of the present time who can produce successful works formed upon the models which have been bequeathed to us.

Larghetto and Fugue for the Organ. Composed by Westley Richards.

THE first movement of these is melodious and well written for the instrument. The return from the episode in A minor to the first theme in C major is a happy surprise, and gives additional variety to what is already a well contrasted and effective piece. The Fugue is somewhat long, and as Mr. Richards, by keeping strictly to four parts till the pedal commences, seems to aim at correctness of part writing, it would have been better to avoid the 8ths in the third bar on page 8. Easy to play and well adapted for the instrument, these pieces will no doubt achieve popularity.

WEEKES AND CO.

God of Eternity. Sacred Song. Words by C. C. Sturm. Music by Böhrer. Arranged and in part composed by R. Andrews.

WE learn from the title-page that Mr. Andrews has already appeared before the public as the composer of "Our home's eternal rest." We hope he has been more successful in original composition than in adaptations. The one before us is incoherent in the extreme. After a short introduction hovering between A minor and C major, the song commences with a phrase in C minor which is repeated three bars later in A minor. This sufficiently indicates the author's ignorance of the laws of tonality, and raises a doubt whether the song is worthy of further perusal—a doubt which is speedily confirmed as we proceed.

Te Deum Laudamus, for Parish Choirs. Composed by J. H. Greenhill, Mus. Bac., T.C.D.

THIS Te Deum is well suited for its object, and though not particularly striking, will prove acceptable and useful wherever it finds its way. The harmonies to the words, "When Thou hadst overcome," &c., point to reflection on the writer's part, while good effect is made in many passages with a unison of all the voices. We must, however point out to Mr. Greenhill that at the top of page 2 in the last bar occurs a chord which can only be a diatonic 7th on E♮, i.e., D♮ G♮ B E To resolve this upon a 7th o B, making the D♮ ascend to D♯, is contrary to the senses of sight and hearing. The piece is dedicated to Sir John Goss. Doubtless the dedication was induced by a feeling of admiration, which has produced a follower of an excellent example.

Hymn Tunes. Edited by E. H. Turpin.

IF there is one subject which is supposed to have made progress under the influence of modern musical thought it is the consideration of the spirit, character, and accent of words in their alliance with music. This collection of hymn tunes is compiled upon the principle that one piece of music is adaptable to as many poems of the same metre as can be found. In the words of the Preface, "Any tunes of the same metre may be used for other hymns than those to which they are assigned." If with our modern prejudices we can accept this, we must not blame the editor for want of logic in taking various compositions of great masters and allying them with words and sentiments dissimilar to those which inspired the original thought. Nevertheless we must praise the judgment he displays in taking for his model in the fifty original tunes he contributes the purer traditions and manner of our early church writers, and avoiding the exciting and extreme treatment which mars so many modern compositions for church use.

RIVINGTONS.

The Chorister's Guide. By W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

IF practical experience gives the right to speak with authority on the subject in whose service such experience has been acquired, the choristers of England should look up to Mr. Barrett as to an oracle. The task of writing for a class is always a difficult one, and demands peculiar qualities in him who undertakes it, for besides a sympathetic insight into character, mere style and language must be subservient to the particular nature of the case. In writing for the young, correctness and simplicity of expression are essential, definitions must be clear, the information elementary, and disputed or doubtful points avoided. No one would think of broaching a new theory of harmony in a treatise for schoolboys; and few, we think, while giving them a cursory view of any branch of science, would take for an authority a work which, however able, is subversive of all received principle and acquired precedent. We cannot but admire the fervour with which Mr. Barrett attaches himself to the cause of his old friend and chief, Dr. Stainer, but we wish he had reserved his expression of confidence for a time when enthusiasm for a leader could have been manifested without endangering the success and merit of an enterprise. As, therefore, we are informed that Dr. Stainer is the authority for Mr. Barrett's views of harmony, we will forbear to criticise the chapter devoted to that subject beyond making two remarks. Firstly, too much or too little is said for the treatment of the subject to be either elementary or exhaustive. Secondly, we must draw attention to our author's analysis of the following chords :—

"The chord D is the major ninth from E♭ and the chord E though often called the suspension 5-4 is really the chord of the major 13th from C." Surely this is original. To go seriatim through our objections—in the third lesson we read "All intervals within the compass of an octave are called simple; beyond an octave, compound, the ninth being a repetition of the second," &c. Now the ninth may be said to be compounded of the intervals of an octave and a second, but to say it is the repetition of the latter is not correct enough to form its definition. It is much clearer also to keep the word bar as descriptive of what is contained between two bar lines, and not make the former apply to both the lines and the space contained by them. What could a beginner understand by the following sentence, on page 23 : "Scales with sharps are a fifth above each other, scales with flats a fifth below." We must be behind the scenes to disentangle this. In the lesson on accents, page 40, we find this passage: "Accent is sometimes moved to those parts of the bar not naturally accented, by means of syncopation." Certainly this may occur, but to take the example in the text, syncopation alone does not alter the accent though it may annul it. On page 45 the minor scale of A with F♯ and G♯ ascending and descending is described as artificial, while on page 71, the same scale in the key of C is taken as the correct basis for the formation of chords in the minor key. On the next page, speaking of the leading note, Mr. Barrett tells the chorister boys that it is called "leading note or sensible because it creates a desire in the mind for the next note to which it leads in order that the sentence may satisfy the ear." Now as the last note mentioned is Do, and he is here speaking of Si, we have more reasons than the mere obscurity of the text for believing that the note naturally tends downwards, and have no right to presume that he means that it should resolve upwards. But the explanation of the character of this note, if touched upon at all, should have been treated at greater length, considering that a large proportion of the music of the church was written before the world became sensible of the upward tendency of the leading note; besides, the peculiarity is not an accident of the note as the 7th of the scale but as the 3rd of the dominant. The lesson on melody is the weakest in the book, for besides some confusion in the definition we find the two following sentences : "The difference of key does not alter the melody so much as a change of accent." We were not aware that mere transposition altered a melody at all. "The last rose of summer" may be more ineffective in one key than another, but it is always the same melody. "A melody is still a melody even though it be sung by many voices in unison." We never suspected the contrary. In the 25th lesson we find specimens of counterpoint ascribed to several learned writers, but the latter never could have intended them as such, at least in the cases of Sir George Elvey and Sir F. Ouseley. The examples are in two parts, and apparently form the two upper parts of compositions having originally other parts below them. In an earlier chapter of the work we are referred to Cherubini amongst others as an authority in these matters but we regret if approval of these examples results from a study of his work. "Canon is strict imitation in all the parts chosen," for what? With regard to the last chapters of the book on Chanting, the Order of the Service, the meaning of the Psalms, Hints on singing, &c., Mr. Barrett's remarks are admirable, and his great experience enables him to give good practical advice to his young audience. On the whole the book will be found useful by the author's compeers.

SIMPSON AND CO.

Only thee. Song. Words by Charles Swain.

Hurrah for Bluff King Christmas. Song. Words by Arthur Matthison.

Composed by John Cheshire.

ALTHOUGH little is attempted in the first of these songs beyond wedding a simple and appropriate melody to the words, there is so much musical feeling shown in the manner in which it is accompanied that we are inclined to award as much praise to Mr. Cheshire as so unpretentious a ballad can be expected to call forth. The unexpected close in C major, in the 12th bar of page 3, the chord of A flat, commencing page 4, and the holding-note for the voice, whilst the original subject is played before the final bars, are points of much interest. The second song is a bold setting of some well-written verses; but as both words and music are somewhat conventional, we have merely to say that we find no fault with either. When the season comes round for the usual talk about "yule logs" Mr. Cheshire's song may have a fair chance amongst the hundreds of similar effusions called forth by the occasion.

Marche des Fantassins, pour le Piano, par Guillaume H. Wall.

AN effective and melodious March in E flat major, military enough in character for the "Fantassins" to whose service it is devoted, and yet pleasing enough for performance in a drawing-room. It is a relief to find that the second subject, in the subdominant—usually termed the "Trio"—is not characterized by the triplets which modern composers seem to consider as a portion of the recognised pattern for this style of composition. The March is throughout well written, and easy to play.

MORGAN, SCOTT AND CO.

Thou, Lord, knowest Thy servant. Words by Anna Shipton. Music by M. L. Bradshaw.

WE recommend the lady if she intends to continue writing to go and have her first harmony lesson at once. Are people as a rule so very ignorant in musical matters that ungrammatical twaddle of this sort can receive attention ?

Dr. Watts' 146th Hymn. For organ or harmonium. By E. Edgar.

ANOTHER case of picking out themes on an instrument and writing down notes anyhow. Mr. Edgar dedicates this medley to Wisdom, using Greek characters. Does he imagine music to have no connection with wisdom that he presumes to think she will accept the dedication ?

ALPHONSE BERTINI, SEYMOUR AND CO.

Organ Music for Church or Chamber. By Walter Spinney.

THIS volume consists of seven pieces of varied character and all partaking more or less of the flavour of Italian opera. Of these we prefer Nos. 5 and 7, though we do not see that any object is served by adopting the antiquated method of omitting the sharp of the leading note in the signature of the key. In No. 1 we object to the use of E♭ as a passing note in the key of A, and though the progression from a triad on any note to one on a semitone below is often effective, it would be as well to omit the 5th in the latter unless particular circumstances warrant its use. Here it seems to us a little extreme. In the 9th and 11th bars of the March the effect of 5ths between extreme parts is not concealed by the crotchet rest inserted. These subterfuges have had their day, and modern use demands consideration for the sense of hearing. Passing over certain cases of consecutive octaves between extreme parts which are disagreeable, and 5ths between dominant or sub-dominant and tonic which become trite by too frequent use, we must protest against the use of a second inversion on B♭ coming immediately after one on E♭ on page 4, line 3, bar 4.

TONIC SOL-FA AGENCY.

A Tract on Musical Statics. An attempt to show the bearing of the most recent discoveries in Acoustics on chords, discords, transitions, modulations, and tuning, as used by modern musicians. By John Curwen.

WE can readily understand that the author of this work should devote a large portion of it to the proof of the superiority of "Just Intonation" over what is termed "Temperament," but can scarcely agree with him that the former is "what the world is coming to," unless indeed the fact of all musicians being converted to "Sol-faism" were too apparent to be doubted. Without entering into this question, however, we may do Mr. Curwen and his disciples the justice to say that they are thoroughly in earnest; and the Tract before us shows that the founder of the system is desirous that his followers should be not only sound practical teachers but well versed in all the phenomena of the science which they profess. It would be impossible, in our limited space, to do more than call attention to the present book, which certainly does infinite credit to the study and research of its author. We admire his explanation of the difference between Musical Statics and Musical Æsthetics, in the preface, and are glad to find that the value of Professor Helmholtz's recent discoveries are fully acknowledged. A due consideration of Musical Statics is no doubt a matter of real importance; but let us hope that in our diligent study of causes we do not partially lose sight of the abstract beauty of effects.

W. R. BOWDEN, OXFORD.

Hymn for St. John Baptist's Day. Words by Rev. E. W. Benson, D.D., Chancellor of Lincoln.

Six Original Hymn Tunes. Words from "Hymns Ancient and Modern." (By permission.)

Twelve original Single Chants. (First Series.)

By Charles H. Lacon, St. Edmund Hall, Oxon.

THE duties of a reviewer are very onerous. After toiling through piles of music of a pretentious character, he naturally thinks that on arriving at a little budget like this of Mr. Lacon's, he will in its simplicity find a moment's relaxation. But the absence of apparent difficulty in the task perhaps induces a too conscious easiness, and consequent want of care. Here we find nothing original; of that we do not so much complain. Nevertheless pieces of this short and simple character if they possess no striking merit should be entirely free from grammatical faults. In the last of the hymn tunes and that for St. John Baptist's Day we find the root and the 7th of one chord descending to the third of the next at the same time. In chant No. 11 bad melody occurs in the tenor part where the A♭ rises to D♮. We hope Mr. Lacon will carefully revise the second series, the issue of which we understand he contemplates.

C. C. DE ZOUCHE, MONTREAL.

Te Deum in G. By Dr. P. R. Maclagan.

WE are at a loss to conceive how such nonsense as this can find a publisher. Besides innumerable other faults, we have only to mention that there are fourteen cases at least of consecutive 8ths and 5ths, and the inquiry naturally follows: Is the Doctor a graduate in music, and at what university?

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BALLARAT.—Mr. Austin T. Turner's Cantata, Adoration, was performed by the Harmonic Society on Good Friday. The principal soprano part was taken by Miss Pitts, the contralto by Miss St. Clair, the tenor by Mr. A. Ford (the leading trio of the Melbourne Philharmonic Society), and the bass and baritone by Mr. P. Cazaly. The chorus numbered about one hundred performers. There was a very good band, led by Mr. E. King; Mr. G. Herbert presided at the organ, and Mr. Turner conducted. The performance was highly successful.

BEDFORD.—The Amateur Musical Society gave the second concert of the ninth season on Tuesday evening the 8th ult. The first part consisted of Handel's Acis and Galatea. The solo vocalists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, Mr. Carter (in place of Mr. Kerr Gedge, absent through illness), Mr, Robson (of Cambridge), and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The band had the valuable assistance of Mr. Gunnis and Mr. F. Kendall, of the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Nicholson, solo flautist, and Mr. Rowlett, oboe, &c. The most effective numbers were "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir," sung by Madame Wells, with piccolo obbligato capitally played by Mr. Nicholson; "Love in her eyes," and "Love sounds the alarm," by Mr. Carter; and "O ruddier than the cherry," sung with great spirit by Mr. Thomas. The choruses went well, especially "Wretched lovers" and "Mourn, all ye muses." The second part commenced with a "Duo Concertante" for flute and piano, performed with great success by Mr. Nicholson and Mr. Diemer, and encored. Mr. Lewis Thomas sang "The death of the brave," by P. H. Diemer; and Miss Agnes Bartlett (a pupil of Mr. Diemer) played Moscheles' "Recollections of Ireland" with much brilliancy and taste. The concert terminated with an overture ("Thoughts of Home") by the Conductor of the Society, Mr. P. H. Diemer.——THE members of the choir of Holy Trinity Church recently presented an exceedingly elegant drawing-room timepiece to their organist, with the following inscription on a silver-gilt plate:—"Presented to P. H. Diemer, Esq., by most of the past and present members of the choir of Holy Trinity Church, Bedford, as a token of their sincere regard and esteem. June 14th, 1875."

BOSTON.—On Wednesday, the 2nd ult., a highly successful concert was given in Shodfriar's Hall, by the members of Mr. D. J. Wood's Choral Class, assisted by Madame Billinie-Porter, Mrs. Lee, Mr. Wilford Morgan and Mr. Chaplin Henry. The first part consisted of Sir W. S. Bennett's May Queen, which was well rendered, and the second part was miscellaneous. Mr. G. H. Porter, organist of Louth, presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Wm. Porter, of Bourne, at the piano; Mr. D. J. Wood, Mus. Bac., Oxon., conducted.

DERBY.—The Glee and Madrigal Society gave its second concert on Tuesday evening, the 25th May, at the Lecture Hall, to a very large audience. The programme was an excellent one. Mr. W. J. Kempton conducted. The principal vocalists were Miss Dalmaine, Mdme. Whitaker, Mr. Alfred Kenningham, and Mr. Tom Kempton. The first part of the programme consisted of works of the late Sir W. Sterndale Bennett—a selection from The May Queen, a song, "Castle Gordon," sung by Mdme. Whitaker, and the favourite part-song, "Come live with me and be my love." Between the parts the quartett, "God is a Spirit," was sung, in memory of Sir Sterndale Bennett. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous.

DUNDEE.—On the 21st ult., a Soirée Musicale was given by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Smieton, at Panmure Villa, Broughty Ferry, on the occasion of the opening of a chamber organ built by Mr. F. W. Nicholson, Bradford, from specifications by Mr. W. H. Richmond, Dundee. The instrument is beautifully decorated by Mr. Drummond, and is in all respects a work of art. Although of considerable range—having 22 stops, 784 pipes, and 3 complete manuals—it is most delicately voiced, and specially adapted for chamber performances and concerts. Mr. Richmond and Mr. Smieton, jun., played a selection of music especially selected to display the beauties of the instrument; and the concert ended with a performance of a lyric opera, in two acts, composed by Mrs. Smieton.

DURHAM.—The Parochial Choir Festival took place on Thursday the 27th May, in the Parish Church. The Very Reverend the Dean of Durham preached an admirable sermon appropriate to the occasion. The Rev. T. Rogers, Precentor of the Cathedral Church of Durham, officiated as Conductor. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. F. T. Grey. Mr. Lawther presided at the organ. The singers numbered 520, of whom 263 were in surplices. Under the able direction of Mr. Rogers, the choir was kept together with remarkable precision, which was no easy matter, as the singers met together on that day for the first time.

GREENOCK.—At a public rehearsal of music given in the Town Hall on the 14th ult., by about 400 children belonging to six of the Greenock Sunday Schools, the choir of the George-square Congregational School was awarded the first prizes for hymn singing and sight tests.

The singing of the children was remarkably good. Mr. Merrylees and Mr. Anderson were the examiners, and awarded the prizes. The hymns were sung under the direction and conductorship of Mr. Tucker, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Turnbull, Mr. Magee, Mr. Cowan, and Mr. Walton, jun. Mr. Henderson, music teacher to the School Board, put the children through a series of sight tests.

JARROW.—On Wednesday evening, the 26th of May, the Messiah was performed in the Mechanics' Institute. The vocalists were Miss E. Liddle, Miss E. Moore, Mr. R. K. Vinycomb, and Mr. T. Moar. Miss E. Hill presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Waddington, A.R.A.M., at the piano; Mr. Guthrie led the band, and Mr. J. Hickman conducted. The chorus was very efficient, and the band of sixteen performers, ably supported by Miss Hill and Mr. Waddington, aided greatly in making the performance an excellent and creditable effort to cultivate a taste for high-class works.

LIVERPOOL.—On Saturday the 12th ult., at the Institute, Mount-street, a silver tankard was presented to Mr. Thomas Armstrong, who for many years has conducted the performances of the Societa Armonica. Mr. W. Laidlaw, the President of the Society, gave the testimonial, in presence of a large number of the members. Prior to doing so he alluded to the objects of the Association, and eulogized the Conductor, holding up Mr. Armstrong's punctuality and zeal as virtues to be imitated. Mr. Armstrong, having acknowledged the gift, spoke of the work of the Society, and pointed to the fact that within a comparatively short period it had introduced to Liverpool for the first time nine symphonies, six or eight overtures, and a similar number of marches, all of a very high order. Its labours were unattended by any pecuniary gain, being solely for the furtherance of the cause of music.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—A concert in aid of the Convalescent Home took place on Tuesday evening, the 1st ult., in the Town Hall, under the patronage of Mrs. Perry Herrick. A new Oratorio, The Land of Promise, by Francis Howell, formed the first part of the programme. Mr. Deane, senr., Mr. Frank White, and Mr. George Adcock were instrumental in getting up the concert; and great praise is due to the Philharmonic Band, and to the chorus singers. The solo parts were well sustained by Miss Gill (soprano), Mr. Jno. Adcock (tenor), and Mr. Chas. Lacey (bass). The second part of the programme was of a miscellaneous character.

OXFORD.—On the 4th ult., the Queen's College Musical Society gave a concert in the College Hall. Prince Leopold was present, and the performance was a great success. The first part of the programme consisted of Macfarren's Cantata, May Day. The choruses were rendered in a creditable manner; the recitative in the solo and chorus, "Loyal hearts," was taken by Master Bryan. The chorus, "Lads and lasses," which concluded the first part, was most enthusiastically received and encored. The quartett, "Lo the early beam," the solo parts in which were taken by Messrs. Pierson, A. J. Tuckwell, C. H. Murphy, and Master Bryan, was one of the most enjoyable features of the evening. Mr. Dodd's pianoforte solo was a brilliant performance, and Schumann's quintett, Op. 44, was splendidly played, the performers being—pianoforte, Mr. T. W. Dodds; violin, Mr. W. H. Eayres; second violin, Mr. W. Hayes; viola, Mr. W. Kay; violoncello, Rev. H. Dean. Mr. T. W. Dodds conducted.——A VOCAL and instrumental concert took place at Culham College on the 11th ult. Among the most noticeable features of the performance was the careful rendering by the choir of Bishop's "Winds whistle cold," and the vocal solos by Mr. Croomes, Mr. Colegate, and Mr. Vallis. The band, led by Mr. Brocklebank, played several classical pieces with expression and judgment. Mr. Bird accompanied, and Mr. Desborough conducted.

PARSONSTOWN, KING'S CO.—The first concert of the Choral Society was given on Thursday evening, the 17th ult., in John's Hall; Patron the Earl of Rosse. The first part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and Romberg's Lay of the Bell; the second part of vocal and instrumental solos. Miss Herbert, of Dublin, took the principal soprano part; the other soloists were Miss Harbourne, Miss Browne, Mr. R. Biggs, M.A., LL.D., Rev. W. Ewing, B.A., Herr Dreyer, and Mr. Arnold. Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 24, for piano and violin, was admirably rendered by Mrs. Biggs and Mr. M. Arnold, and Bach's Prelude, arranged by Gounod, for violin, piano and harmonium, with Dr. Biggs at the harmonium, was also a feature in the programme. Great credit is due to the Conductor, Mr. Matthew Arnold, for the manner in which the choral portions were given, considering the short time the Society has been in existence.

RICHMOND, SURREY.—An exceedingly good amateur concert (under Royal patronage) was given at the Star and Garter Hotel, on the 3rd ult., in aid of the new Cemetery Chapel. The first part of the programme consisted of The Woman of Samaria. The choruses were rendered by a choir of 60 voices, under the leadership of Mr. Hopper, organist of S. Matthias, Richmond Hill. The solos were sung by Miss Frances Courtenay, Miss Prothero, Sir George Innes, and Mr. Frederick Robinson. The second part was miscellaneous. Mdlle. Bartkowska sang "Bel raggio" in a brilliant manner, and Miss Courtenay was encored in Sullivan's "Where the bee sucks." Herr Oberthür played two effective harp solos, and the choir gave a spirited rendering of "Blanche" (Kücken), "A Vintage Song" (Mendelssohn), and "Good night, farewell" (Garrett). The interval between the parts was occupied by the presentation of a handsome silver-mounted ivory bâton to Mr. Hopper, as a mark of regard, and in appreciation of his musical skill. The presentation was made by Sir George Innes. Mr. Burnham Horner presided at the harmonium, and the Rev. Walter Miller, M.A., Mus. Bac., Oxon, at the pianoforte. The proceeds of the concert amounted to nearly £150.

SHEFFIELD.—The members and friends of the Amateur Musical Society "assisted" at an entertainment given in the Surrey-street Music Hall, on the 1st ult. Bach's sacred Cantata, My spirit was in heaviness, was performed in Sheffield for the first time, and was highly appreciated. The choruses were well sung, and the trying tenor solos especially were delivered with much intelligence, and considerable vocal skill. The second part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's Octett, arranged for pianoforte duet and string quartette, and Professor Macfarren's Cantata, May Day—one of the most charming illustrations of modern pastoral music. Throughout, the performances in point of musical quality reflected the highest credit upon all who took part in them. Herr Schollhammer conducted with his accustomed tact and judgment, and efficient organ and pianoforte accompaniments were furnished by Mr. Joseph Perkin.

SOUTHPORT.—The tenth Festival of the Wigan Church Choral Association was held at St. Andrew's Church on the 22nd ult., when the choristers present numbered over 280. The services commenced with early celebration at 9 a.m., the music used being Garrett's Communion Service in F. At the morning service, at 11 a.m., the following was the order of the music: Processional, "Benedicite," to a Gregorian chant; "Venite," and Psalms to chants by Hopkins and Turle in E flat; Te Deum and Jubilate, Berthold Tours in F; Anthem, Barnby's "O praise the Lord." During the collection, the presiding organist, Mr. Ffoulkes, played the Adagio from Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony, and at the conclusion of the service a March in B flat by Fr. Lachner. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. G. A. E. Kempson, one of the hon. secs. of the Association, the preacher being the Lord Bishop of Chester. The evening service commenced at 7 p.m., the Rev. G. A. E. Kempson again intoning the prayers. The Psalms were sung to a chant by Major Lemon in D major; Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to W. T. Best's fine setting in chant form; the anthem was Sir John Goss's "Stand up and bless the Lord;" and the Recessional hymn, "Praise, my soul, the King of heaven," to Sir J. Goss's grand tune. At the conclusion of the service Mr. Ffoulkes played a march by Lemmens. The preacher for the evening was the Rev. Prebendary Cross. Altogether this may be considered as having been the most successful festival since the foundation of the Association; and the performance of the music reflects great credit on Mr. Ffoulkes, organist of St. Andrew's, Southport, and on Mr. P. de Soyre, the organizing choirmaster. The collections amounted to upwards of £30.

WALTHAMSTOW.—The Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. J. F. H. Read, gave a performance of Spohr's Last Judgment, in the National Schoolroom, on Monday evening, the 31st May, which was a decided success. The solos were sung by Miss Duval, soprano; Miss Reimar, contralto; Mr. Howells, tenor; and Mr. Ap-Herbert, bass. Mr. H. R. Bird presided at the pianoforte; the overture and symphony were played by Mr. Bird and Miss Read. The second part of the programme consisted of songs and part-songs.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. J. D. Martin, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Portobello, Edinburgh.——Mr. James Gregory, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's Parish Church, Birkenhead, ——Mr. Billinie Porter, late of the Parish Church, Bromborough, Cheshire, to St. Andrew's Church, Liverpool.——Mr. T. REMARKS BY THE AUTHOR.

I have endeavoured in writing these Chants for the Canticles to give a change to the music, where the character of the words seems to demand it. It has been, and is now, I believe, to a great extent the custom in many of our churches to sing the same unvarying chant throughout a whole Canticle, regardless of the change of character of the words in some of the verses, be their expression that of praise, or be it of a prayerful or penitential character. There is no doubt a change in the music is required, but it will be said, "if you make much variety and use different chants in the course of a Canticle, you will make the music too difficult, and out of the reach of ordinary choirs." To some extent this is true; but what has been attempted here has been to give a varied expression with simple means—variety without much difficulty of execution, and suitable, it is hoped, to the character of the words. The change in the Venite at verse 6, "O come, let us worship, and fall down," for instance, will show, I think, with what simple means—as far as the voices are concerned—a contrast of effect can be produced. In some of the verses also which are of the same character and meaning, I have endeavoured to give a reflective character to the music by returning to the same chant as that previously used—for example, in the Magnificat, the verse "His mercy is on them that fear Him, throughout all generations," is linked by the same music to the verse "He remembering His mercy hath holpen His servant Israel;" thus showing the continuance of God's mercy, not only to His servant Israel of old, but to all succeeding generations. I am not aware that this device has been used before in chant form, it was never used by the elder Church writers at all, there are, however, some good examples of it to be found in some modern Services, but Services, as every one knows, are out of the reach of ordinary country choirs at present.

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

ESTHER: AN ORATORIO BY G. F. HANDEL.*

By F. W. Davenport.

Published for the first time in a popular form, all musicians must rejoice in the hope that the Oratorio of Esther may now become popular also in acceptance. So important an event demands special attention, and is a fitting opportunity for a few remarks upon the history and character of the work.

It was on the occasion of his second return to London that Handel was persuaded to take the place of the amiable Dr. Pepusch, as director of the music to the Duke of Chandos at Cannons. While occupying that post, from 1718 to 1720, he wrote the two Chandos Te Deums and the twelve equally famous Chandos Anthems, and though much engaged with the schemes then afloat for the introduction of Italian Opera under the title of the Royal Academy of Music, he found time to write his first English Oratorio, the subject of the present notice, which was privately performed on the 29th of August, 1720, at the mansion of his patron. In 1750 an enthusiast, named Julius Plumer, placed the following inscription upon the organ in the parish church of the village of Edgware, which served as a temporary private chapel to the Duke during the erection of his residence:—

HANDEL WAS ORGANIST OF THIS CHURCH
FROM THE YEAR 1718 TO 1721, AND COMPOSED THE ORATORIO OF ESTHER ON THIS ORGAN.

Interesting as is the fact recorded, we cannot help remarking that, with his admiration for the great man, Mr. Plumer displays small acquaintance with his method of composition.

From its first production until 1731 the Oratorio was shelved; but in that year it was performed with action by the children of the Chapel Royal, under the direction of their master, Bernard Gates. Soon after this, the Academy of Ancient Music executed it, though on a more extensive scale. All these were private representations, but their success warranted a public performance, and on the 20th of April, 1732, the work was produced "at the great rooms of Villars-street," by a private speculator, whose venture, however, quickly succumbed when Handel himself brought out the Oratorio, revised and with several additions, at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket, on Thursday, the 2nd of May. The advertisements announcing these two representations will be found in the preface accompanying the present edition. After several repetitions in the spring of 1732, Esther was repeated during Lent, 1735, and in March, 1740; while in Dublin it was given in 1742, and again in London in 1751 and 1757. With the exception of a performance of extracts from the work at the Great Festival at York in 1825, it has not been heard in public for over a hundred years, although we may now look forward with confidence to its reproduction. We may mention that the poem, which is in part founded on Racine's Tragedy, has been attributed to several writers; but it seems most probable that it was the work of Gay, who also wrote the libretto of Acis and Galatea which was produced at Cannons immediately after Esther.

To come now to the work itself: the overture, which has been heard frequently apart from the rest of the work, is an extended composition in three movements; the last a fugue, which appears also in a trio for three string instruments. The argument closely follows the Bible version, although the author of the poem gives life to the various passages selected by introducing groups of Persians and Israelites, as well as individuals who, by little strain of the imagination, might be supposed to have been present on the several occasions.

In the first scene, Haman, the favourite of Ahasuerus, king of Persia, having apparently just received the royal assent to his plan for the massacre of the Jews, scorning the entreaty of one of his attendants, excites the Persians to let the "place" of the Jews "be no more found among them." They quickly respond to his appeal, and, defying the God of Israel, re-echo their leader's sentiments in a chorus, "Shall we the God of Israel fear;" where, after three bars, enters a counterpoint to the first phrase of Haman's song, "Pluck root and branch," the two being worked together, and several times repeated. In the next scene the Israelites, unconscious of their impending fate, are rejoicing in the news of the coronation of Esther, niece to Mordecai, a Jew, and, before Haman's treachery, a trusted councillor of the king. After a charming song, "Tune your harps," with an accompaniment of violins pizzicato and an oboe obbligato, a chorus, "Shall we of servitude complain?" a song, "Praise the Lord," for a treble voice, with an obbligato for the harp, and one for a tenor, "Sing songs of praise," all indicative of an attitude of trustfulness in God even through captivity and tribulation, the Israelites are interrupted by the sudden arrival of one of their countrymen, who tells them of the decree of Haman, and raises before their horrified visions a picture of the terrors that must soon ensue. The misery of the people at this announcement is depicted in a chorus, "Ye sons of Israel mourn," which is a wonderful example of intense and deep expression of the text. This number, after the introduction of an alto song, "O Jordan, sacred tide" is repeated, and forms a fitting termination to the first act or part.

In the next Act, Scene 1, Esther and Mordecai meet in presence of some of the Jews, and the Queen, perceiving that something unusual has occurred, inquires of her uncle the cause of his sorrow. His answer is the announcement of the recent decree and the declaration that she must act as mediator with the King. Knowing the law that death is the fate which awaits a subject venturing unsummoned into the presence, she hesitates, when Mordecai, in a most melodious air, "Dread not, righteous Queen, the danger," reassures her, declaring that love will pacify her husband's anger, and that, even should the worst befall her, death, in the fulfilment of her duty, would be preferable to a throne and remorse. Reassured and roused, Esther offers herself a willing sacrifice, if need be, and pours forth the expansion of her sentiments and intentions in a pathetic song, "Tears assist me," and hastens to the presence of the King; while the Jews, awaiting the result of the audience, and following her with anxious eyes, cry out to Jehovah to save them and "blunt the wrathful sword."

In the next scene we are introduced to the chamber of Ahasuerus, who is disturbed in his meditations by the sound of a footfall. Turning round indignantly, he demands "Who dares intrude into our presence without our leave! It is decreed he dies for this audacious deed." Immediately, however, he perceives Esther, and noting her look of misery and doubt, love dissipates his anger, and his arms receive her fainting form. The most beautiful and romantic duet which follows is equal to anything Handel ever wrote of the kind, replete with exquisite phrases and modulations expressive of his passion and devotion, and her resolution to gain her purpose battling with her bodily prostration. Then, in the sweetest of strains, he reassures her and grants her prayer, afterwards acceding to her request to meet Haman at a feast in her apartments. The act terminates with the chorus, "Virtue, truth, and innocence," wherein the Jews, confidently awaiting the issue, extol the virtues of their heroic countrywoman and Queen.

Act III., Scene V., opens with a solo for an alto voice, called an "Invocation," in which a young Israelite conjures Jehovah to arise and execute His ire. This is followed by the most important chorus in the work, "He comes to end our woes," in part a hymn of triumph, descriptive of the power of the Almighty, and, again, an act of faith in the abiding love of Jehovah for His people and their ultimate happiness and glory.

The last is the banquet scene, where Esther reveals the designs of Haman against her family. The fate of the latter is speedily settled by the amorous monarch, while the disconcerted favourite falls prostrate at the feet of the Queen, who, in the song "Flattering tongue, no more I hear thee," at once expresses her triumph and righteous indignation. Haman is hurried away to execution, and the whole work terminates with a chorus interspersed with solos in praise of the attributes of God, in thankfulness for the deliverance of his people, and expressing confidence in their approaching restoration to liberty and happiness.

It has been said that Esther, the first work of its class, does not compare favourably with Handel's later oratorios. With this we cannot agree. Taking into consideration its smaller proportions (which may at least ensure a complete performance without cuts), and putting on one side a few cases of careless writing, which it would be useless and possibly impertinent to point out, we can with confidence assert that Esther shows indications of greater finish and elaboration than many of the later, larger and more celebrated oratorios; that the interest of the story is excellently sustained, the words and situations thoughtfully considered, and wonderfully expressed; while many instances of beautiful effects of harmony occur, some of which may be said to be almost peculiar to this work, among the many the master produced. In the 23rd bar of the first chorus there is a chord of F minor with the 7th E♭, and a passing note, D, struck simultaneously. The D descends to C, and the whole chord resolves naturally enough on dominant harmony in the key of E♭. Without the D or with an A natural, the effect would be ordinary enough; but, as it happens, it is unique. In the 5th bar of the song, "Tune your harps," and wherever the phrase is repeated, we have, for the period, the unusual chord of a 2nd inversion of a dominant 7th unprepared. Observe, also, the wonderful interrupted cadence in the 24th and 25th bars of the song, "Sing songs of praise;" the pedals, pages 38 (last scene) and 47, 2nd score; the modern effect of a tonic 7th, though resolved out of the key in the 91st bar of "O beauteous Giver;" the minor 13th to the word "She," pages 68 and 70; and in the latter page, 2nd score, last bar, the supertonic chromatic harmony, after a minor chord in the subdominant. Lastly, there is the beautiful resolution of an augmented 6th, page 82, 2nd bar, analogous in its effect to passages in the 7th song of the series, "The fair maid of the mill" of Schubert, and the 7th number of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. In these two cases there is a 2nd inversion of supertonic resolved on a 1st inversion of the major tonic harmony. In the case before us the augmented 6th G♯ D resolves upon a first inversion of the minor tonic B♭ harmony, which is still more intense and striking.

Speaking generally of the whole work, being written with a view to possible stage representation, it will be classed with Joseph, Belshazzar, Jephtha, and others of the dramatic, as opposed to the two didactic works. Although the Persians and Jews are not so vividly contrasted as in Belshazzar, the principal persons are strongly individualized. The character of Haman naturally lends itself most to dramatic effect, especially in the wonderful accompanied recitative near the end. The chorus, "He comes," with the episode, "Earth tremble," is worthy to be ranked with Handel's best examples of so-called "descriptive music." But the most remarkable piece in its relation to the art of the period is the recitative and duet where Esther enters the royal chamber. The transition from F major to E♭ major, to announce the change of scene to the palace, anticipates a class of effects more peculiar to later times; while that to G minor, where the king first perceives Esther, and the harmony to the words "Sure sign of grace," would satisfy the conscience of the most devoted partisan of the principles of modern opera.

The neglect of what is deserving of attention naturally rouses the indignation of such as perceive it. This must be our excuse if we have dilated in too enthusiastic a manner upon the importance of Esther. It may indeed be observed that the fulness of the score is perhaps due to the accident of there being no organ in the mansion at Cannons, that Handel did not habitually bestow much care upon the setting of the text, and that hence dramatic power, when visible in his work, is likewise an accident. Happy accident it certainly is, that Handel's first and last oratorios with female titles, Esther and Theodora (apart from the resemblance of the characters of Haman and Valens, especially in their wrathful moods), should represent to us, through the wide difference of the heroines, and consequently "accidental" variety of the music, a complete epitome of Handel's manner; the lyric, tender grace of the one supplementing the dramatic and vigorous power of the other.

In conclusion, we can only hope that Messrs. Novello and Co. may continue the series, and give to the public many more, if not all, the hidden treasures of the master.

A correspondent who wrote to us some time ago suggesting the establishment of Summer Concerts in the Horticultural Gardens, South Kensington, has again addressed us to offer another proposition, viz., that one of our best military bands should play on the summer evenings in the Gardens on the Victoria Embankment. It certainly does appear strange that in the heart of our London season there should be so few opportunities for the general public to hear a good band in the open air; and if it were possible, by rigid supervision, to ensure a sufficiently attentive audience, the experiment might very fairly be tried. At all events, it would have the merit of being in truth, and not merely in name, a "Promenade Concert."

Any bright anticipations which may have been formed by the announcement that Mr. Carl Rosa is about to open the Princess's Theatre for the performance of English Opera must be dimmed by the intelligence that the works will be chiefly those composed by everybody except English writers. Surely we are not so fond of the Operas represented at our lyrical establishments during the season that we shall find it necessary to have them translated into English for performance when we can no longer hear them in Italian. A German, Italian or French company we would gladly welcome, with a répertoire of works sung in the language to which the music was originally wedded; but the mission of an English company should be to perform English Opera, and we cannot believe that success will attend any speculation in which this fact is not distinctly recognised.

A temporary success is sometimes more detrimental to a man than positive failure. The Dean of Worcester having carried his point with regard to the Cathedral Festival in that city, seems not content with abolishing this one, but is now, we find, using his influence to suppress those at Hereford and Gloucester. The question, therefore, now ceases to be a local one, and assumes a character of so much importance that a vigorous stand against such intolerance becomes a public duty. The Three Choir Festivals have been so long established that the consent of the Deans to grant the use of the Cathedrals in which they were held has been hitherto applied for almost as a matter of courtesy; but should the attempt to follow the example set at Worcester be made at Hereford and Gloucester, we trust that the clerical authority, hitherto respected, will be at once boldly challenged. The exercise of a despotic power by individuals placed in high positions is very often the first indication that such power exists; and even Deans may find that a determined opposition, not only to public opinion, but to the wish of a majority of the clergy, will result in weakening an influence which, in these days of disaffection, it should be their earnest desire to strengthen.

The few hours elapsing between the conclusion of the day and the commencement of the evening are, as a rule, anxiously looked forward to by those engaged in artistic or literary pursuits as the brief period which may legitimately be devoted to rest and seclusion. Yet, strangely enough, this is precisely the time chosen for the meetings of the "Musical Association for the investigation of subjects connected with the art and science of Music." Whether the thin attendance at the monthly gatherings of the Society may be chiefly traced to this circumstance we cannot say; but certainly at the very agreeable conversazione with which the Association concluded its first season many members were present who are but rarely seen at the regular meetings. During the recess we trust that this matter will receive full consideration; for, with every desire for the success and advancement of the Society, it can scarcely be expected that the reading or discussion of a paper on abstruse questions in science or art will ever be regarded, even by the most earnest members, as a relaxation after work.

We are glad to find that the "British Musical and Dramatic Institute" has changed its name to the "School of Dramatic Art," and that at what was termed the "semi-public opening" at Ripon House, Woburn Place, Russell Square, little was said or done to falsify a claim to its new title. As there seems, however, to be still some latent idea of cultivating music in this Association, we beg distinctly to assure Mr. Charles Sleigh, the manager, that he had better leave this branch of study to other and more able Institutions. He deserves every credit for his energetic endeavours to found a school of dramatic art, but a school of musical art is already founded; and even if it were not so, the vocal and instrumental exhibitions we heard at Ripon House were scarcely of a nature to command public attention. The chorus singing, under the direction of Mr. Henry Regaldi, was fairly good; but a programme of common-place songs, given by pupils who should be studying how to produce their voices, to the accompaniment of a cottage pianoforte, formed a strange contrast with the many highly creditable specimens of dramatic training given during the evening.

We can scarcely believe that the directors of the Alexandra Palace have sufficiently considered what is the music most likely to attract the public to Muswell Hill. There can be no question that in persevering with Italian Concerts and "Promenade" programmes, with an occasional sprinkling of well-worn classical pieces, they are neither appealing to a taste already existing, nor helping to create a new one; for certainly the fashionable supporters of our lyrical establishments care not to hear their favourites in operatic scraps; and the real music-lovers will continue to go to Sydenham until they find that the same works, as well executed, can be heard at the Alexandra Palace. As the concerts now given in this establishment must entail a large outlay, it would be well to think whether this expense would not be better incurred in providing music of a higher character; for, although the "British Army Quadrilles, with all the original effects," may do very well for those who attend a "Hound Show," it assuredly is not of a nature to realise the bright promises made to the musical world in the opening prospectus.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The last of the Summer Concerts, on the 17th ult., was made extremely interesting by the performance of Niels W. Gade's Cantata, "The Erl-King's Daughter," which, although containing some of its composer's best thoughts, has been strangely neglected in this country. There may be some want of sustained interest in this composition; but the music shows the hand of a master throughout; and the choral writing is not only highly dramatic, but fresh and tuneful enough to command the attention even of a non-musical audience. The performance of the Cantata was exceptionally good, the principal parts being well sung by Mdme. Osborne-Williams, Mdme. Blanche Cole and Mr. George Fox; and the choruses being given with much precision and effect by the Crystal Palace Choir, especially the beautiful "Morning Hymn," which commences the third part. Mr. Manns conducted with his accustomed efficiency.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The revival of "Semiramide" at this establishment was chiefly remarkable for the excellent manner in which it was placed upon the stage, and the fine singing of M. Faure in the part of Assur, for certainly neither Mdme. Vilda's Semiramide nor Mdlle. Scalchi's Arsace could be accepted by those who remember the great vocalists who have made these characters famous. "L'Etoile du Nord," with Mdme. Patti and M. Faure in the principal parts, has been successfully given, the Peter of the great French vocalist thoroughly realising, both in his acting and singing, the intention of the composer. Many good works have been brought forward this season at the Royal Italian Opera; but it is a melancholy sign of the time that so consummate an artist as Mdme. Patti should choose "La Traviata" for her benefit. The season terminated, as announced, on the 17th ult.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The revival of "Mignon" was welcome to many, not so much for the merit of the music as for the exquisite embodiment of the heroine by Mdme. Nilsson, who was received, as she deserved, with the most enthusiastic marks of approbation. Mdlle. Chapuy created a genuine effect as Rosina in "Il Barbiere," her singing, if somewhat cold, being remarkable for perfection of execution. The Opera, too, afforded a good opportunity for Signor De Reschi to display his best qualifications as the Barber, the music of which he gave with much animation and humour. Mdlle. De Belocca has certainly not improved her position by the performance of Cherubino, in "Le Nozze di Figaro;" she looks the part well, and is sufficiently sprightly as the saucy Page; but the music is too severe a tax for her powers; and, although encored in "Voi che sapete," no genuine effect was created. The establishment closed on the 24th ult., with an excellent performance of "Lohengrin."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The feature of the final concert for the season on the 5th ult., was an "Idyll" to the memory of the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, composed by his fellow-student and warm friend, Dr. G. A. Macfarren. The good feeling which prompted so graceful a tribute would have been sufficiently appreciated had not the artistic worth of the composition earned the good opinion of the listeners, and we trust, therefore, that Dr. Macfarren—who bowed from his place in the room, in acknowledgment of the applause with which the Idyll was greeted—would believe that the audience desired not only to show admiration of the work, but deep and heartfelt sympathy with the feelings of the composer. The other orchestral works were Haydn's Symphony in E flat (No. 10) and Beethoven's in C minor, the concert concluding with Weber's "Jubilee" Overture. Vieuxtemps' Violin Concerto (No. 5, in A minor) was finely played by Herr Wieniawski, and an unusual brightness was given to the vocal portion of the programme by the engagement of Mdlle. Titiens, who sang the Scena, "A qual furor," from Fidelio; the song, "Glöcklein im Thal," from Euryanthe, and two of Schumann's Lieder in her very best style. Mr. W. G. Cusins, the Conductor, received quite an ovation at the conclusion of the concert.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual public concert of this Institution was given at St. James's Hall on the 21st ult., with a success far exceeding any former performance of the pupils within our recollection. The fact of the Marchioness of Lorne consenting to give away the prizes on this occasion has a significance of the utmost importance to the welfare of musical art in this country; for, although the Academy boasts of a long array of the highest names in the land as patrons and patronesses, it is only by personally attending the periodical exhibition of the students that any active sympathy can be shown in the cause. The excellence of the pianoforte playing was, as usual, the theme of general admiration; but so much progress has latterly been made in the vocal department that a great portion of the singing would have done credit to public artists; and, although the violin was entirely represented by one pupil, and that a lady (Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant), her performance was marked by such excellent intonation, such facile execution, and so much depth of expression, as to call forth the warmest marks of approbation. Amongst the pianists, Miss Katie Steel in the first movement of Schumann's Concerto in A minor, Miss Amy Turner-Burnett, in Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Miss Alice Curtis, in Sir Sterndale Bennett's Caprice in E, and Mr. F. W. Bampfylde, in Weber's Concert Stück, displayed such excellent powers as to warrant us in predicting for them a highly successful future; and we must also award unqualified praise to Miss Edridge, Miss Borton (who played with much refinement Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Rondo Piacevole"), and Mr. Deas, all of whom acquitted themselves with credit both to themselves and their teachers. Of Mdlle. Gabrielle Vaillant (who performed the Adagio of Spohr's Violin Concerto, No. 9) we have already spoken, and a good word must also be given for Mr. Rose's rendering of Schumann's Fugue in B flat on the organ. Miss Larkcom was much applauded for her singing of the Scena, "Softly Sighs;" Miss Mary Davies gave with true artistic feeling an expressive song by Mr. Eaton Faning (a student), Mr. Henry Guy sang "Adelaida" with good effect (the pianoforte accompaniment being well played by Miss Pamphilon); Miss Jessie Jones gave a poetical setting of Shelley's "I arise from dreams of thee," by Florence Marshall (another student); Miss Bolingbroke displayed a good voice and style in "Di tanti palpiti," and Mr. Wadmore created a genuine effect in Handel's "Lascia Amor," all being received with the most encouraging marks of admiration. The first movement of a Symphony by Mr. A. H. Jackson (for which the Lucas Silver Medal had been awarded) is a highly meritorious composition. The ideas are clearly expressed, the instrumentation shows a feeling for legitimate orchestral effect, and the entire movement is so well knitted together as to evidence the result either of some experience or decided natural aptitude for the task. It was warmly applauded, and the composer called on to bow his acknowledgments. The choral music was carefully and effectively sung throughout, the female voices, especially, showing the result of excellent training. Before the distribution of prizes Dr. Macfarren (the Principal) made an earnest and eloquent speech, tracing the progress of the Academy through its many vicissitudes to its present state of prosperity, and thanking the Marchioness of Lorne for kindly undertaking the office, the duties of which she so gracefully fulfilled. The Marquis of Lorne in the few words he addressed to the audience alluded in glowing terms to the satisfaction he had felt in the performance of the pupils, and said that in every respect it was fully equal to that of any similar Institution on the Continent. The Conductor, Mr. Walter Macfarren, had an arduous duty, which he discharged with the utmost ability, both band and choir being throughout the concert thoroughly under command. The hall was filled in every part, and many eminent members of the profession were amongst the audience. The following is the list of prizes:—

Mr. G. W. Hammond's morning concert at St. James's Hall, on the 8th ult., was attended by a crowded audience. Mr. Hammond gave a thoroughly classical reading of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," and in the pianoforte part of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Chamber Trio (Op. 26), Schumann's Quintett in E flat (for pianoforte, two violins, viola and violoncello), and Mendelssohn's Concertante variations (for pianoforte and violoncello), proved himself a sound and reliable performer. He also played with much success in Mozart's Sonata for two pianofortes (ably assisted by Mr. W. H. Holmes) and gave two graceful pieces of his own composition, which were warmly applauded. The other instrumentalists were Messrs. Henry Holmes and Mori (violin), Mr. A. Burnett (viola), and Herr Lutgen (violoncello). Miss Annie Butterworth, in Mr. O'Leary's excellent song, "He roamed in the Forest," was highly effective, and a song by Mr. W. H. Holmes, capitally sung by his son, Mr. F. Holmes, was also very well received. Other vocal pieces were given by Miss Julia Wigan, Mr. Arthur O'Leary acting with his usual skill as accompanist.

Mr. Pyatt, of Nottingham, has made arrangements with Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Foli, and other eminent artists, for a series of Fifteen Ballad Concerts, to take place in the autumn at Glasgow, Edinburgh, the principal towns of the north of England, and the Midland Counties.

The Royal Hand-Bell Ringers had the honour of giving a Campanological Concert on the 2nd ult., at Windsor Castle, by command of Her Majesty the Queen. The programme, performed on a carillon of One Hundred Bells, included Costa's March from "Eli" (66 bells), Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," and a selection from "La Fille de Madame Angot." Mr. Duncan S. Miller conducted.

A sketch by Mr. Gilbert, entitled "Eyes and No Eyes," founded on a fairy tale by Hans Christian Andersen, with some effective and appropriate music by Mr. German Reed, has been produced with success at St. George's Hall. Mrs. German Reed was excellent as an elderly coquette, and Miss Fanny Holland and Miss Leonora Braham are great acquisitions to the company, both as singers and actors. Mr. Alfred Reed gave a very good impersonation of an old man, and Mr. Corney Grain and Mr. A. Bishop were amusing as Pierrot and Arlequin, twin brothers, dressed in Italian pantomime costume.

The St. George's Glee Union Concert on the 2nd ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, was chiefly noticeable for the good singing of the Choir in "April is in my Mistress' Face," "Parting and Meeting," and "In the Lovely Vale of Streams." The solo vocalists were Miss Horder, Miss Buley, Mr. J. T. Carter, and Mr. Theo. Distin. The pianoforte solos, "Introduction and Polonaise" (Chopin) and "La Cascade" were well played by Miss Julie Augarde. Mr. Garside conducted.

The "National Music Meetings" commenced at the Crystal Palace on the 1st ult., the first day being devoted to solo soprano vocalists. Eleven were selected to compete, the first prize, a purse of £25, being eventually awarded to Miss Charlotte Agnes Larkcom (a student of the Royal Academy of Music), and the second, a purse of £10, to Miss Anne Carrina. The judges were Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. W. G. Cusins, and Signor Arditi. The second day was for tenor singers. Five competed; the first prize of £25 being given to Mr. Sylvester, and the second, of £10, to Mr. Fryer. The judges were Signor Arditi, Mr. J. L. Hatton, and Mr. J. Barnby. On the third day eleven contralto or mezzo-soprano singers competed, the judges being Sir Julius Benedict, Signor Arditi, and Mr. Brinley Richards, when the first prize of £25 was awarded to Miss Annie Butterworth, and the second, of £10, to Miss E. A. Reimar (both students of the Royal Academy of Music). Eight baritone or bass singers then contended before the judges, Mr. H. Leslie, Mr. O. Goldschmidt, and Mr. J. L. Hatton, the first prize being given to Mr. Edward Wharton, and the second divided between Messrs. Henry Cross and Frank Thomas, who were pronounced to be equal in merit. The last day of the competition was devoted to Choral Societies and Brass Bands, the performances taking place in the Handel Orchestra. Two Choral Societies competed—the South London Choral Association and the Liverpool Representative Choir. The judges, Mr. H. Leslie, Mr. Brinley Richards, and Mr. J. Barnett, gave the prize of £100 to the Liverpool Representative Choir, much satisfaction being also expressed with the admirable singing of the South London Choir. The Choir of All Saints' Church, Cambridge, next sang for a certificate of merit, which was granted. Then three Brass Bands competed, the judges being Signor Arditi, Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, and Mr. J. L. Hatton, and the prize was given to the Carrow Works (Norwich) Band. Certificates of merit were also awarded for sight-singing, and certificates of "having been selected to compete" were given to all who had won this position at the preliminary examination. On Saturday, the 10th ult., the prizes were distributed by Madame Lind-Goldschmidt, the ceremony being preceded by a concert, at which the successful candidates performed. The report states that the competitions have presented gratifying features, much care and preparation having been evidenced, especially in the soprano and contralto classes.

A free scholarship for a female pianist, between the ages of 14 and 21, tenable for two years, has been generously founded by Lady Goldsmid in the Royal Academy of Music, which will be competed for at Easter. The Committee of the Goss Testimonial, we are also informed, has resolved to elect a student of the College of Organists to be placed in the Academy, the funds raised for the testimonial being sufficient to defray half the expense of a scholarship. The pupil will be elected for three years, the examination to take place during the present month.

We are informed that the valuable violoncello lately in possession of Herr Wilhelmj, the eminent violin player, has been bought by Herr Schuberth.

The Mildmay Park Choral Society gave a very successful performance of Mendelssohn's "Athalie," and a miscellaneous selection, at Hare Court Lecture Hall, Canonbury, on Tuesday evening, June 29th. The soloists were Miss A. Bliss, Miss Evans, Madame Arnold Potter, and Messrs. Irving, Payne, and Young; Pianoforte, Mr. A. Cox; Harmonium, Mr. E. Snell; Conductor, Mr. Watkins.

At the Musical Examination recently held by the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, the following candidates passed:—Senior Choral Fellows—J. M. The Notation of Vocal Music, on the principle of Substitution of Pitch; as adapted in the National Method. By W. W. Pearson.

In a former notice of what Mr. Pearson terms the "National Method" of teaching vocal music we mentioned, as an objection to his system, the fact of his writing relatively with an absolute notation; and although we admit that a temporary popularity may be gained for this, as for any other device of the same nature, we still cannot believe that it will ever obtain a general recognition amongst musicians. In his opening remarks Mr. Pearson, in speaking of the relative notation invented by the Misses Glover, of Norwich, says, "It is the use of this principle which is the real cause of the extraordinary success of the Tonic Sol-Fa System, in the elementary stages, though it is attributed by the unthinking to the notation itself; but the mistake of the originators, in using a new notation, instead of employing part of the old one, has been its bane, and brought against it the opposition of most musicians." Now we do not believe that there was any mistake made in inventing a new notation—for Mr. Curwen is a sufficiently clear-headed man to see that to write for one method in the symbols invented for another is a logical absurdity—but the error, in our opinion, was abolishing at one fell swoop the "ladder" system and writing the notes in a straight line. We are of course aware that by using the letters to be found in every printing-office, compositions noted upon the new system can be very easily multiplied; but this is outside the musical question, and therefore cannot be accepted as an argument in favour of Tonic Sol-faism itself. The author of the book before us, in his observations upon the ease of writing relatively with the present notation, seems to speak as if the notes in the five-line staff were not named and pitched by the treble clef in all published music; for he says that "pupils taught on the plan here suggested will be accustomed to the varying pitch from the beginning, so that they will never imbibe those notions of absolute pitch which are at present part of the nature of an old notation reader." This would be all very well if a person taught upon this system were not compelled to "imbibe those notions of absolute pitch" by association with those who were not disciples of Mr. Pearson, but there can be no question that a student of the "national method" would be worse off amongst musicians than a man in a foreign country; for though the latter may not be able to make himself understood to those around him, he at least will not find that a word in his language which conveys a definite idea to himself means something quite different to his next-door neighbour. So thoroughly indeed does Mr. Pearson ignore the importance of admitting the fact that the clef not only gives a name but a pitch to a certain note in our present system, that he proposes writing all the voice parts with the treble clef, showing the real pitch by an indicator at the commencement—a system the advocacy of which seems doubly strange in one who urges as a reason for rejecting the Tonic Sol-fa method, that "it does not give the power to read music, in the ordinary sense of the term, and is, in reality, little better for practical purposes than mere ear-singing." With every word in the author's chapter upon "Time notation" we cordially agree. Why, indeed, should we perplex learners by having various ways of writing the same thing? "Uniformity of beat," as he truly says, is all we require; and as "Compound Time" (as it is absurdly called) is merely simple time moving in triplets, what reason can there possibly be for making the matter so complicated to students? surely four, two, and three divisions in the bar are all we really want: are we still to adhere to the lingering notion that minims look sacred, and crotchets secular? In conclusion we cannot but give Mr. Pearson every credit for earnestness and conscientiousness. He thoroughly believes in his own system, and has consequently a right to be respected. But the fact of his inviting opinion by sending his pamphlet for review is a proof that he is open to conviction; and we feel therefore that he will receive our strictures in the spirit which dictated them. We have considered the subject much; and, whilst thoroughly admitting the soundness of the theory upon which the modern systems of vocal tuition are built, we cannot but reiterate the assertion with which we concluded our notice of Mr. Pearson's former book, that "in order to write vocal music relatively and truly, we must have a new notation."

It is a good thing to give thanks. Full Anthem. By J. Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc.

This Anthem was written by the Organist of Manchester Cathedral during the present year, for the Commemoration Festivals at the Churches of St. Mary and St. Michael, Hulme, Manchester. It is an extended composition in four movements. The first, a short chorus in C major, with an effective, and to some extent, independent organ part. We cannot say, however, that we like the harsh sound of the second inversion of a Dominant 9th used without the 7th, and with the root f 3rd on page three, score one, bar one. The second movement in G major, though perhaps modulating too freely considering its brevity, is a melodious four-part chorus. A better contrast with what precedes it would be secured if this were rendered by solo voices, for which the music is well suited, when the effect of the chorus entering with the words, "Upon a loud trumpet" would still further enhance the effect. The third movement is for a chorus of tenors and basses accompanied by sustained harmony, and this is followed by a recurrence of the music of the opening chorus, given now to the words, "I will sing unto the Lord." The whole concludes with a fugue which works up to a brilliant coda and forms a fitting termination to a musicianly piece. It will thus be seen that the work is of some length, but the author, with consideration for the practical, has given a direction for the omission of a considerable part of the last chorus, so that if time is an object in the performance, busy people may not be debarred from the enjoyment of a goodly portion of the Anthem.

Original Hymn Tunes to Favourite Words. By Alfred King, Mus. Bac.

Eternity.	Art thou weary?
Jesu grant me this.	Jesus, tender Shepherd.
Three in One.	How sweet the Name.
Faith of our fathers.	Hail to Thee.
Safe home.	Ye servants of the Lord.

These words will be recognised by many readers, and the music is not unworthy of them, although faults are not entirely absent. The two second inversions (in "Rosbury 6," score 2, bars 2 and 3), following one another, are unsatisfactory. The effect is also bad where the D pedal is quitted in "Faith of our fathers," score 3, bar 2, before it becomes a note of harmony. The bass frequently leaps to a note above that last sounded by the tenor part, as in the Ave Verum, 6th and 7th bars. Simple compositions like these should at least be free from grammatical faults, for which originality of treatment or taking melody do not sufficiently atone.

Pack clouds away, and welcome day. A Four-part Song. Words by Thomas Heywood (Circa 1620). Composed by Charles Harford Lloyd.

This is a melodious song, and in parts so well written as to make us wish to alter the harsh effect of the soprano commencing upon A against the G sharp of the alto (bar 3, page 2); and we must also take exception to the second bar of page 3, when the seventh on C♯ rises, an unpleasant effect of fifths between the two chords being felt, in addition to the ascent of the discord. We know that this sort of writing constantly passes current in modern music; but it is not good counterpoint, and we protest against it. The words are well expressed throughout, and the lengthening of the phrase "To give my love good morrow," is extremely effective.

Polly Vanderdecken. Song. Words by Gordon Campbell. Composed by E. Silas.

This song, which was sung with much success at the composer's recent concert, is certainly destined to become popular, although, so simple is it in construction, that much of its effect must depend upon the singer. The words are set to a pleasing little pastoral melody, with just such an unpretentious accompaniment as the subject demands. The unexpected chord of G minor on the pause, with the temporary modulation into D minor, are points which evidence the minute care bestowed by the composer upon a ballad which merely aspires to be, both in words and music, an artless village song.

The Rock of Ages. Sacred Song. Words by Finlay Finlayson. Composed by John Francis Barnett.

Mr. Barnett has here given a clever and sympathetic setting of Mr. Finlayson's words, and one which we think baritone singers will thank us for drawing their attention to. An Agitato symphony in arpeggio, commencing upon a tonic pedal in E minor, introduces the voice part with much effect, the arpeggios being continued as an accompaniment until the change into the major. Here the alteration from C to 12.8 rhythm is effective, an exceedingly melodious theme, to the words, "Unto Thy Cross, O Lord, I cling," with a triplet accompaniment, forming an admirable contrast with the agitated subject at the commencement. There is much true musical feeling in the treatment of the phrase, "Help and deliver me," with the pedal harmonies, at the conclusion, and in every respect the song may be cited as a highly favourable specimen of its composer's powers. We perceive, by the title-page that it has already been sung by Mr. Santley.

Sweet Rothesay Bay. Song. Words by the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Composed by William H. Cummings.

There is a Scottish character about the music of this song which faithfully reflects the feeling of the words. The theme, too, is extremely melodious, and lies well in the register of the contralto voice. From so accomplished a musician and vocalist as Mr. Cummings we may reasonably expect a composition which shall be worthy of his reputation; but this little ballad, unpretentious as it is, will not only sustain but add to the fame of a composer who has proved by his charming Cantata "The Fairy Ring," that he has the power to produce works of a higher importance.

The Rainy Day. Song. Words by Longfellow. Composed by Wm. Fossey Bradshaw.

Longfellow's words have an extraordinary fascination for young composers, and yet there can be no question that to colour them in sympathy with the mind of the poet it requires that power of diving into the inner meaning of the author which can only be gained by experience. Mr. Bradshaw's music, with the exception of some occasional crudities—such as the doubling of the leading note in the dominant seventh of D minor, and the awkward harmonies which follow upon a dominant in C major, commencing bar 11, page 4—is fairly good; but he has failed to enter into the true spirit of the poetry. Some indications there are, however, of a musical feeling which may be cultivated to good purpose; and we counsel Mr. Bradshaw rather to study than publish, at present, if he really wish to secure a successful career.

Novello and Co., and J. Masters and Co.

Four Tunes for the People's Hymnal. Composed by G. Alston Sarvent.

These unpretentious compositions, which are not without merit, are marred by grammatical faults, such as the 5ths, between tenor and bass, score 3, to the words "Thou with," and the bad resolution of the 2nd inversion of a Dominant 7th, score 7, last 2 bars.

A Rudimentary and Practical Treatise on Music. The Rudiments of the art of playing the Pianoforte. By Charles Child Spencer.

The author of these works is evidently an acute thinker, and has reasoned with much ability upon the theories which he advocates; but we think it a pity that in Treatises designed, as he says in his preface, for the assistance of the "young student," such an opinion as that there are "nine forms of the minor scale," should be put forward. This assertion, however, is not only advanced in the first-named of the two books before us, but various attempts to prove the truth of it are made by quotations from compositions, ancient and modern. That his case is made out, however, we venture to doubt; for whatever notes may have been taken by the older writers for the construction of their melodies, there can be no question that the minor scale in the works of those later composers who understood the harmonies which these notes naturally carried, is as thoroughly defined as that of the major. In proof of this we may say that, to us, the extract from Mozart's duet, "Crudel perchè finora," is purely in the modern scale of A minor, and that it begins and ends with the dominant; that the composer has harmonised the melody in the simplest manner according to the accepted theory of the degrees of the scale, merely using an augmented 6th on the minor 6th of the key, upon notes which he might have allowed to belong to the tonic chord. To say that, without regard to the feeling of the melody, the notes of the air and accompaniment are E, F, ♯G, A, B, C, ♯D, E, and by considering the first and last as the initial, and not the dominant, to assert that it is in the "eighth form of the minor scale" is rather, we think, torturing the facts to help the theory, than allowing the theory to be strengthened by the facts. We do not doubt that the old composers wrote in scales which are not now recognised; but these are the "Church modes," of which Mr. Spencer, in a former treatise, has given so lucid an explanation. Better, therefore, is it to believe that the notes, for instance, with which Mendelssohn gives out the words "Lord, bow Thine ear to my prayer," in Elijah, are in the

"Phrygian mode," than that they are in "Form 5th of the model minor scale." Many of the explanations in the book are exceedingly good, but we regret to see that compound time is said to be two or three bars of triple time put together. That moving in triple divisions should be confounded with moving in triple time is unquestionably a misfortune, but it cannot be said to be a fault with a student who is told, as Mr. Spencer tells him, before giving some bars with triplets, that sometimes "one half of a measure is in duple time and the other half in triple time." Some of the examples of counterpoint are, we think, scarcely good enough to place as models before a tyro—as, for example, in the last bar of page 86, where the counterpoint skips from the discord, C, and 11th bar of Ex. 2, page 73, where we have only three G's on the first of the bar, the counterpoint afterwards rising to D—but, generally, the progressions are fairly good. In speaking of the Fugue, no rules are given for the construction of the answer; but many valuable extracts from the works of the best composers are placed before the student to guide him in his labours, and the author deserves much praise for the earnest manner in which he urges the necessity of diligently studying the highest models. The second book, which treats of the art of playing the pianoforte, is well considered throughout, the early lessons and the remarks on fingering being particularly worthy of commendation. Quotations from the compositions of Beethoven, Mozart, Handel, &c., are given, in illustration of the author's observations, most of which are carefully selected. We cannot believe, however, that it is good to transpose and vary passages from classical works for the use of young players, and must therefore protest against Example 45 (merely marked "from Beethoven"), where the opening theme of the Sonata in A flat (Op. 26) is transposed a semitone higher, not only the melody but the basses altered, and bars added at the conclusion, with the subject repeated an octave above. Not one of these alterations makes the passage in the slightest degree easier to play, and we may reasonably wonder, therefore, why such liberties are taken. In conclusion, it may be said that the books are carefully printed—so carefully indeed that Mr. Spencer will, we are certain, thank us for pointing out that, in the first work, the second subject given out by the alto in the Fugue in D minor, at the bottom of page 131, is wrongly noted: B♭ and A should be quavers instead of semiquavers; it is a trifling error, but it may puzzle many students.

Weekes & Co.

The Widow of Nain. An Oratorio, in one Part. The words compiled from the Holy Scriptures. Composed by John Abram, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

As a rule, it is perhaps well that those who publish the works which have been expressly written as an exercise for a Doctor's degree should state the circumstances which called the composition into existence. They are generally remarkably innocent of any originality of thought, but constructed so obviously with a desire to display that knowledge of fugue and counterpoint so essential in a Mus. Doc. that, although but few would care to listen to them save those whose melancholy duty places them in the position of Coleridge's "Wedding Guest" in the Ancient Mariner, there can be little doubt that, should they ever be engraved and circulated, they will be certain to excite respect, if not gratification. In Dr. Abram's Oratorio, however, although the laboured workmanship is occasionally somewhat too apparent, we have so much excellent material that we are tempted to believe, when the composer is free to write as he pleases, that he will produce something infinitely superior to the "Widow of Nain." The superabundance of choral matter gives a certain heaviness to the composition, which abstractedly is a defect; but, as we have already said, the desire to show the power of part-writing was, undoubtedly, the primary object, and we are bound, therefore, to criticise the composer solely according to what Carlyle terms his "line of endeavour." Viewed in this light, therefore, we must award him unqualified praise. The opening chorus, written for a double choir, has many admirable points, the fugal treatment of the themes throughout evidencing not only the result of good training, but of a musical organisation, which, as we have already said, when less under restraint, cannot fail to be turned to excellent account. The orchestral accompaniments, too, in this movement are full of character, and, in every case, highly sympathetic with the varied feeling of the words. The following recitative and air for the tenor, although somewhat Mendelssohnian, breathe the spirit of the text so truthfully as to deserve the warmest praise. In the quartett "Lift up thine eyes," we have nothing remarkable save careful vocal writing, nor do we care much for the chorus "Seek ye the Lord," the ceaseless semiquaver accompaniment to which gives a feeling of monotony which somewhat detracts from the effect of the voice parts. The double chorus, "Blessed are they that mourn," next to the opening piece, will elicit the highest commendation from musicians: it is a vigorous and skilfully written movement, and might alone have proved the author's right to the honour which he sought: the management of the voices where the triplet accompaniment steals in for the first time is extremely happy, and the concluding phrases colour the words with remarkable fidelity. The soprano solo, "But the Lord," contains some expressive, if not very original, vocal sentences, which a good soprano may give much effect to. After a chorus somewhat dry in character, a melodious tenor solo, "Weep not," (in which the words are set with appropriate simplicity) and a clever double chorus, a soprano recitative leads to a solo for contralto, chorally accompanied, which is followed by one of the boldest choruses in the work, "Awake, awake," a vigorous orchestral figure giving much life to the vocal writing. The unaccompanied quartett, for soprano and contralto, may prove as successful as the very similar pieces which seem to be a necessary portion of every modern sacred work; but it has little musical interest. Passing over the tenor air, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," a recitative and chorus, a baritone air (the last-named, however, containing some good vocal phrases) and a contralto solo, "O taste and see," a chorus, quartett and chorus, with some effective orchestral points, will be found especially worthy of attention; the starting of the solo voices in the relative major, after a sudden pause on the dominant of F sharp minor, being particularly worthy of note. The fugue in the final chorus, "Blessed be the Lord God," is well wrought, and sustained with skill throughout, the movement (one of the best specimens of the composer's powers) forming a fitting termination to a work which reflects infinite credit upon Dr. Abram, and which, with all its faults, is so far above the average of such compositions as to have induced us to give it our serious attention.

Hymn Tunes, Chants and Kyries. Composed by James Young.

We cannot see any merit in these jottings. Trite and commonplace melody, combined with faulty harmony, are observable on nearly every page. Why these twenty chants, twelve litanies, and sixteen hymn tunes should ever have passed into a second edition, we are at a loss to conceive. Amid the numerous faults which are worse, musically speaking, than are the literary errors of saying, "I is," and "we am," we can only give examples, such as the consecutive 2nd inversions in hymn No. 6, 5th to 6th bar; litanies No. 2, 2nd bar, No. 8, 3rd bar; double chant, No. 13, 5th to 6th bar, and in the same, 9th bar, the doubled 7th.

Six Hymn Tunes and Three Kyries. By G. H. Armstrong.

If Mr. Armstrong will in future correct his proofs, have some regard for tonality (see No. 6), avoid continually coming to a full close, and doubling the 3rd when it occurs in the bass, we may be able to give unqualified praise to the next composition of his which comes under notice; but it is impossible to speak favourably of the good qualities he displays when they are so out-balanced by unmusicianly faults.

The Children's Service Book for Church and Home. By the Rev. H. Martyn Hart, M.A.

We cannot say whether it is the largely-increasing number or the more general precocity of children which induces so constant a supply of intellectual food for their appreciation. Certain it is, that there is no class in the community better catered for in this respect. It would indeed be strange, if amongst the many publications devoted to their amusement and instruction, a religious manual was not included. This want, unless we are wrong in supposing it to have existed, has been supplied by the small volume under consideration.

The work is divided into four parts; Public Service, Private Service, a Collection of Hymns, and a Few Specimen Sermons. The first is an abbreviation of Morning Prayer, with some selected psalms and the Litany. The responses throughout this portion are intended to be sung by the youthful congregation upon the G, second line of the G clef, with a harmonised accompaniment for a keyed instrument. Musically speaking, this does not call for comment, except upon the fact that the note selected is one of the worst for the purpose the author could have chosen. It certainly lies in the middle of the average voice, but for that very reason is produced neither in the head nor the chest, being almost invariably forced and harsh when sung by untrained voices. The chants (with the exception of No. 3, a harmonised Gregorian tone barred so as to destroy the accents, and No. 11, which is faulty), are from accredited sources and well adapted. The Public Service concludes with a second arrangement of the Litany, by which the children are relieved for a time from the monotony of the G, and a short "Office" compiled by the author. The Private Service contains "Hints for the Conduct of the Service," a selection from the Gospel of St. Mark, and prayers for particular intentions, all very suitable to the requirements of the book. The third section comprises over fifty hymn tunes and litanies, the greater portion of which, we are informed in the preface, Mr. Hart "believes — are either from American sources or are not copyright." We have heard how the hymn tunes of the church were developed from national melodies, and our experience shows how the appropriation has altered the character of the times for well or ill. In thus generously confessing the "fons et origo malorum," Mr. Hart has placed upon record the interesting fact that ecclesiastics have not yet sufficiently acclimatised the national melodies of the negro so as to veil under the cloak of solemnity their primitive vulgarity. But whatever may be our opinion upon the musical portion of the book, there can be no two opinions upon the author's right to deal with his subject from a literary point of view. The sermons which form a fitting termination to the volume are replete with signs, not only of his experience in the matter, but of a natural sympathy with the young, combined with a keen perception of their capacity for the reception of religious teaching.

The Organ Student's Guide. By Francis Edward Gladstone.

The experience of a practical musician can in no way be turned to better account than by writing it down for the benefit of young aspirants. Mr. Gladstone's reputation as a performer upon the organ is a sufficient introduction of the "Student's Guide" to the consideration of the profession. We do not quite agree in his assumption "that everyone intending to study the organ will have first attained to some moderate degree of proficiency in the technicalities of pianoforte playing." No book of instruction should be founded upon any assumption of previous knowledge. It loses some value if it is not complete in itself. A treatise on the art of war could hardly be written for students if the author assumed that they must have been captains in the royal navy. We cannot forbear to point out the unsatisfactory character of the following paragraph: "Those stops which are labelled 8 ft. give the ordinary pitch of a pianoforte. Stops marked 4 ft. will sound an octave above concert pitch; while those of 2 ft. and 16 ft. will give the sound of two octaves above and one octave below respectively." It may be certainly difficult to avoid the terminology of acoustics in defining these differences, but we submit that the vagueness of the expression conveys little if any meaning at all, at least to students.

With regard to the practical working out of Mr. Gladstone's plan we have nothing but approval to express. The progressive exercises, about thirty in number, are thoughtfully written, carefully marked, and well adapted for their purpose. These are followed by eight short preludes intended to illustrate "some of the ordinary combinations of stops." The whole concludes with some "specimens of various styles of organ music, each selected for some special feature." Of these, the melody in F, by the Rev. Scotson Clark, were it not required to display a special effect, would be uncomfortable in the society of its immediate surroundings, an extract from Mendelssohn's 6th Organ Sonata, and a Prelude by J. S. Bach. The last selection is the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, by the last-named composer. This is edited by Mr. Gladstone with the intention of showing "how some of the resources of a modern organ may be employed to enhance the effect of these grand works." We are unable to see how this object is to be attained through such a medium, being convinced that the spurious orchestral effects obtained thereby detract greatly from the sublimity of such compositions. This, combined with the liberties taken with the tempos, was never better proved than in a recent performance in London of the Toccata and Fugue by a celebrated French Organist. Apart, however, from these few points which warrant criticism, we confidently recommend "The Organ Guide" to the consideration of both professors and students.

Bangor.—A concert was given at the Penrhyn Hall, by the Bangor Choral Society, on the 13th ult. The work performed was Haydn's Creation; Artists: Miss Leders and Mr. T. J. Hughes, of Liverpool, and Eos Morlais. The orchestra was under the leadership of Mr. Lawson, of Liverpool; Conductor, Mr. Williams, Penrhyn Lodge. The concert was highly successful.

Brentwood.—On Wednesday evening, June 30th, a concert was given in the Town Hall, for the benefit of Master Brackley, whose father was permanently injured on the railway while in the performance of his duty. This generous undertaking was owing principally to the active efforts of Mr. H. Morley, R.A.M., of Brentwood. The vocalists were the Misses Mary and Mercy Hewkley, and Messrs. J. Hewkley, Cassidy, and J. Hayes; instrumentalists, Miss Simmons, Miss Hewkley, and Mr. H. Morley. The gem of the evening was Mr. Morley's violin solo.

Brisbane.—The performance of Handel's Oratorio, Judas Maccabæus, by the Musical Union, on the 4th May last, was in every respect a complete success. The most marked improvement was perhaps in the orchestra, which was, throughout this most difficult work, thoroughly efficient. The choruses, too, were given, not only with much precision, but with a commendable observance of the variations of tone so essential to the effect of the choral portions of this Oratorio; and the solos were, on the whole, sung with good expression, especially the air "Father of Heaven," which was rapturously applauded. Mdme. Mallalieu presided at the pianoforte with her usual ability.

Buxton.—The first of a series of "special concerts" given by Mr. Julian Adams, took place at the Pavilion on the 17th ult., before a large audience. The programme contained Mendelssohn's Overture, Ruy Blas, the introduction to the third act of Lohengrin, and the Tannhäuser March, all works testing most powerfully the quality of the fine orchestra engaged on the occasion. An attractive feature in the selection was the violin performance of Miss Bertha Brousil, which was deservedly received with the warmest marks of approbation. The vocalists were Miss Jessie Royd and Mdme. Alice Barnett, both of whom thoroughly won the good opinion of the audience: and the pianoforte-playing of the concert-giver, especially in the brilliant duet of Osborne and De Beriot, with Miss Brousil, was the theme of general admiration. Not only at these concerts but at the many given in various parts of England by Mr. Julian Adams, the works of the best masters are invariably selected for performance; and the thanks of all art-lovers are due to him for his unwearied exertions in the good cause.

Cambridge.—The first concert of the St. Paul's Musical Society was given on the 29th June, when a number of solos, vocal duets, instrumental pieces, and part-songs were well rendered, the part-songs, conducted by the Rev. D. B. Banham, being an especial feature. The proceeds were devoted to the Cottage Orphan Home in this town.

Cape Town.—The sacred concert recently given at the Mutual Hall by the Sacred Harmonic Society was very successful, the house being crowded. The singing was excellent, one solo in particular, sung by Miss McIntyre, being loudly encored. We trust the concert will be repeated. The proceeds are to be devoted to the Organ Fund of the new Wesleyan Church.

Chelmsford.—The tenth annual festival of the Chelmsford Association for the Improvement of Church Music, was celebrated in St. Mary's Church, Chelmsford, on Thursday the 15th ult. The hymns and anthem were well selected, but the marked change in the festival book was the setting of the canticles to Dr. Stainer's arrangement of the Parisian tones, which, while essentially Gregorian, possess great variety. The first portion of the prayers was intoned by the Precentor, the Rev. T. J. Heard, and the closing portion by the Rev. J. Parmiter. Mr. H. E. Stidolph presided at the organ, and played with his customary taste and skill three voluntaries:—Introductory, Adagio, by Kozeluch; during the collection, Pastoral Symphony, from Handel's Messiah; and concluding, Grand March, by Dr. Spark. The tune to the processional hymn was composed by Mr. Stidolph for the occasion. An appropriate sermon was eloquently preached by the Rev. J. W. Irvine, of St. Mary-at-the-Walls, Colchester. The offertory amounted to £7 5s. 3d.

Cheltenham.—An interesting ceremony took place recently at Royston House, the residence of Mr. J. O. Smith, late organist of Christ Church. When, some five or six months ago, it became known that Mr. Smith would be leaving an appointment wherein for 27 years he had worked diligently and most ably in the discharge of his duties, the question of a testimonial to him in recognition of his long and valued services in that church was mooted amongst the voluntary members of his choir, and it was resolved to present him with a tea and coffee service of the choicest pattern. Upon the tea-pot is inscribed:—"This service, with a purse of 50 sovereigns, is presented to J. O. Smith, Esq., by members of Christ Church congregation and other friends, on the occasion of his leaving that Church, after a faithful discharge of his duties as Organist for twenty-seven years.—Cheltenham, June 19th, 1875." An address, beautifully illuminated and framed, accompanied the gift. In addition to this there was a testimonial from the professional members of Christ Church choir and other musical friends resident in the town, which consisted of a splendid dining-room clock and barometer in black marble, with a gilt plate bearing a suitable inscription, a drawing of the organ upon which Mr. Smith performed, and an address printed upon satin in gilt frame. The first of these was duly presented in the afternoon, and in the evening at eight o'clock, a deputation from the subscribers to the second waited upon Mr. Smith, who acknowledged the gifts in a most eloquent speech, and an extemporised concert afterwards took place.

Cornwall.—The Cornwall Plain Song Association held its Fifth Annual Festival at Phillack Church, Hayle, on Thursday, the 22nd ult. Eight choirs were present, viz., Charlestown, St. Elwyn, Hayle, St. Ives, Mullyon, Mabe, Lannarth, Porthleven, and St. Peter's, Newlyn. The service in the morning was Holy Communion only, which was taken to Marbecke's plain song, with the addition of some hymns and an "Ave Verum," by Gounod. The massiveness peculiar to Gregorian music was well brought out by the large number of voices. The sermon was eloquently preached by the Rev. W. S. Lach-Szyrma. Mr. Petherick, Organist of the Parish Church, Ventnor, accompanied with great skill, and contributed much to the success of the Festival. The afternoon service consisted of Evensong, without a sermon, and plain song was used for the special psalms and canticles. This service went even better than that of the morning, on account, no doubt, of the music being less difficult in itself and more familiar to the choirs. The canticles were taken to Dr. Stainer's arrangement of the first Parisian tone and the third tone. Mr. Danford, of Newlyn, the Precentor of the Association, rendered valuable help, and is to be congratulated on the results of his work.

Grantham.—A military concert was given by the 2nd Dragoon Guards on the 8th ult., at the Exchange Hall, on the occasion of the Annual Horticultural Show. The playing of the band gave the greatest satisfaction. The vocalist was Mdme. Billinie Porter, who sang with much success "Softly sighs," "L'Ardita," Bishop's "Bid me discourse," and Pinsuti's "I love my love." Mr. H. Dickenson accompanied.

Great Yarmouth.—The fine old organ in St. Nicholas' Church having been thoroughly restored and improved by Messrs. Bishop and Sons, organ builders, of London, was opened on the 6th ult., with full choral services. The choir, under the able direction of Mr. Stonex, the Organist, was highly efficient. The instrument is now a wonderful piece of ingenious mechanism, and the tone of the new stops exceedingly fine.

Lancing College.—The usual Concert on Prize Day took place on Tuesday, the 27th ult. Among the pieces performed may be mentioned Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song," effectively sung, and two instrumental pieces: a pianoforte duet played by the Organist of the College and one of his pupils, and a duet for violin and piano played by the Organist and one of the boys. The vocal pieces were sung by the Chapel Choir and the Concert was conducted by the Organist and Choir-master, Mr. B. Manders.

Maidenhead.—The Philharmonic Society gave its second concert on Wednesday, the 21st ult. Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Roberts, Mr. Selwyn Graham, and Mr. Orlando Christian were the principal vocalists; Herr Rosenthal, solo violin and leader of the orchestra, and Herr Max Schultz, conductor. The first part consisted of songs, Beethoven's 1st Symphony, Auber's Overture, Le Cheval de Bronze, etc., and the second part Haydn's Spring and Summer, from the Seasons, all of which were creditably rendered. Mr. W. Goulden presided at the pianoforte. The concert was very successful.

Melbourne, Australia.—Bach's Passion (St. Matthew), was given by the Philharmonic Society on Good Friday night, for the first time. The best available artists of the colonies were present and assisted in the performance of the work, which was most excellently rendered. Mr. Summers, the conductor of the Society, was presented with an honorarium of £50, as a mark of appreciation of the able manner in which he produced and conducted the work.

Montrose.—At a recent meeting of the School Board, Mr. C. B. Taylor was, after a competitive trial of class-teaching, unanimously appointed Music Master for the Schools under the Board.

Ripon.—On Tuesday, the 13th ult., a large and influential meeting was held at the Town Hall, for the purpose of taking into consideration the desirability of restoring and enlarging the Cathedral Organ. The Lord Bishop of Ripon occupied the chair. The builders selected to carry out the work are Messrs. T. C. Lewis & Co., of Brixton.

Wharram-le-Street (Yorkshire).—On the 9th ult. a most successful amateur concert was given, in aid of the funds for a new Harmonium for the Church, before a large audience. The village choir, ably supported by ladies and gentlemen who kindly volunteered their services, gave several glees in a very creditable manner. Some songs were also well rendered and re-demanded. A selection from the Opera of Beatrice, for piano, harp, and two violins, was effectively played; and a violin solo, "The last Rose of Summer," was exceedingly well rendered by M. Vingo, who was ably accompanied by Miss Roberts (Hull) on the piano. The sum realised was about £13.

WOULD YOU GAIN A MAIDEN'S HEART. Madrigal. By ROBERT SLOMAN, Mus. Doc., Oxon.
"To write a good madrigal is no easy task. In addition to genius and feeling, it demands a large amount of musical scholarship; and so perfect are the models of this class of composition—the Italian and English madrigals of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the Augustan age of pure vocal harmony—that the production of a madrigal like those of Marenzio or Wilbye, has been said to be as arduous as an attempt to rival a statue of Praxiteles or Phidias. . . . Dr. Sloman's music has a relish of the olden time. The separate parts are exceedingly melodious, and the effect produced by their combination is full and rich, while there is not a speck upon the transparent clearness of the harmony. Altogether this is a charming madrigal, and does honour to its author."—The Press and St. James's Chronicle.
"At the present time there are many families who have musical meetings at home once or twice during the month, and to these we recommend this charming madrigal."—The Ladies' Treasury.
Price, nett, 1s.; or the four separate parts, 1s.
Lamborn Cock and Co., New Bond-street, London.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR
THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.
A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.
49, Broad-street, Oxford, May 13, 1875.
Sir,—I herewith enclose a cheque for the Pedals and Action, duly received. I must say that I am very much pleased with them. I have easily fixed the Pedals with the aid of your printed instructions. Return receipt and oblige—Yours respectfully,
To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol. F. W. J. CHAUNDY.

4, Rose Cottages, South Norwood Hill, London, May 24, 1875.
Sir,—I enclose a P.O. Order for the Pedals and Action, and am exceedingly pleased with the easy and ingenious manner of attaching the Pedals to the Pianoforte Keys. It all works well.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
SEPTEMBER 1, 1875.

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

By HENRY C. LUNN.

BELIEVING with the genial Charles Lamb that we should say grace upon twenty other occasions in the day besides our dinner, we cannot but think that one of these occasions should be before hearing a Symphony by Beethoven, on entering a room to listen to the Messiah, or indeed whenever a great musical work is placed before us as an offering to our mental, as food is to our physical, wants. But with still greater thankfulness ought we to do so after the banquet; for expectation is apt to make us somewhat querulous, whilst satisfaction generates a feeling of placid gratitude more in accordance with the frame of mind suitable for the utterance of such words. As epicures in art, therefore, we are content to wait until the feast is over, when instead of hoping and anticipating that our appetite may be appealed to as we wish, we may calmly reflect upon what has been placed before us, and shape our remarks according to circumstances. The same author already quoted says "a short form upon these occasions is felt to want reverence; a long one I am afraid cannot escape the charge of impertinence." As we have no desire to lay ourselves open to either of these accusations, we will endeavour as much as possible to let the facts of the last musical season speak for themselves; and as we wish to show our gratitude for small mercies, we hope that any criticism we may feel compelled to make upon these facts may be accepted as prompted rather by hopes of the future than by dissatisfaction with the past.

We had almost said that the principal event at our Italian Opera Houses was the production of Wagner's Lohengrin; but it would be more correct to say that it was the only event. That a season so destitute of novelty should satisfy the subscribers seems almost inexplicable to those who live in the artistic, instead of the fashionable, world; but it is the business of lessees to study the powers of endurance of their supporters, and the theory is evidently to produce nothing new as long as they are content with the old. An extensive répertoire, therefore, is usually published in the prospectus, from which the performances, it is said, "will be selected"; and then with a few quasi novelties looming in the distance, the season is supposed to be provided for, the names of the singers, in fact, being the only portion of the preliminary announcement of the slightest interest to those who rent the boxes and stalls. In spite of this apathy, however, Wagner has quietly made his way; and as the rivalry between the houses has resulted in giving us two Lohengrins, it is highly probable that two Tannhäusers may make their appearance next season, so that we may thus be enabled to trace their composer's style backwards. It would be needless to repeat our remarks upon the relative merits of the performance of Lohengrin at each establishment. At the Royal Italian Opera the effect was first made; and we only regret that a longer time could not have been given to the rehearsal of the choruses, for in every other respect the representation of the Opera was highly creditable. The only first appearance which calls for remark is that of Mdlle. Zaré Thalberg, who made an impression as Zerlina, in Don Giovanni, which she scarcely sustained in subsequent parts. She has a fresh and well trained voice, but should gain experience before she appears on the same stage and in the same characters as those who have so long and so deservedly held the favour of the public. Signor Carpi, who replaced Signor Nicolini as the Knight of the Swan, in Lohengrin, must be spoken of in terms of qualified praise, for although acceptable enough in Wagner's Opera, he afterwards proved that his powers were too limited to retain permanently the post of first tenor. Of the well known vocalists we can only say that whilst the greatest favourites were strangely held back during the season, others were as strangely put forward, and this often in parts for which they were by no means suited. No doubt there may be a sufficient reason for this as for many other apparent eccentricities of management; but not presuming to comprehend the tactics of lessees, we merely state the fact.

The performance of Lohengrin at Her Majesty's Opera must, we presume, be accepted as a sufficient excuse for not producing five or six interesting revivals which were definitely promised. Of course we have had Il Talismano and Mignon, but Cherubini's Medea, in which Mdlle. Titiens was to have played the heroine, a part mentioned in the prospectus as "eminently qualified to display her genius alike as a singer and an actress," was put aside—the creations of Balfe and Ambroise Thomas, with Mdme. Christine Nilsson in the principal characters, being considered of primary importance in the scheme of the season. The success of Mdlle. Chapuy, a brilliant and well cultivated soprano, must be recorded as one of the most noteworthy occurrences of the season, her singing in Il Barbiere, especially, although somewhat cold, thoroughly satisfying those who listen only for perfection in the execution of those embellishments which characterise the unreal school of lyrical art known as the "modern Italian Opera." Mdlle. Varesi's style was at once recognised as that of an accomplished artist, but the voice had scarcely sufficient quality to enable her to hold a first position; and Mdlle. Pernini, although decidedly successful on her first appearance, failed during the season to advance in the good opinion of her hearers. Mdlle. de Belocca should not have played Cherubino, in Le Nozze di Figaro, for in Mozart's exacting music she showed all her weak points. Whether she may be accepted next season in characters more suitable to her we cannot say; for there can be little doubt that the cordiality of her reception on her début was partially owing to her personal attractions. Neither of the new comers in the tenor department—Signori Bignardi and Panzetta—created any permanent effect; and Signor Brignoli—who made his first appearance at this establishment—was too hard and unsympathetic a singer to win the favour of his audience. We live in hopes that in Mr. Mapleson's new Operatic home on the Thames Embankment, which it is said will be ready next season, we may have our attention called somewhat more to the tenors and basses, and somewhat less to the prime donne.

The two Italian Opera houses have not had it all their own way this season, for at the Gaiety Theatre a French Opera has been given by a French company; and in many cases so excellently were the works sung and acted that those who think at all upon these matters were more than ever confirmed in their opinion of the superiority of such a rendering over the spiritless Italian versions which have been so long placed before English audiences. A reality like this ought to receive every support; and should the experiment be repeated next year, there is every reason to believe that it may attract the attention it deserves, and lead to the permanent establishment of French Opera in this country.

The promises made in the prospectus of the Philharmonic Society have not been all fulfilled during the season; and it might therefore be worth considering in future years whether it is politic to make such promises at all. If good concerts are given, and as many interesting new compositions produced as can be properly prepared, the subscribers and public will be perfectly content; for it is infinitely better that the energy of the Society should be utilised in adequately presenting works than in feebly redeeming pledges. Under the zealous conductorship of Mr. W. G. Cusins, the band has very decidedly improved this year; but there is still wanting a delicacy which time and attention may yet produce.

The Sacred Harmonic Society firmly adheres to its conservative line of policy, leaving to others the task of bringing forward works which have not received the sanction of age. Macfarren's St. John the Baptist has however been repeated; and Sir Michael Costa represents the only other living composer whose Oratorios have been recognised. The "British Orchestral Society" sustains its reputation, although it does not advance it. The orchestra contains good materials, but certainly the best use has not yet been made of them. We have always questioned the policy of preserving the title of this Association, partly because it limits the actions of its promoters, and partly because it seems somewhat to challenge the pretensions of those great foreign artists whose good opinion is worth preserving. The programmes have, however, been well selected; and if the music continues to be of a sufficiently high character, and the executants thoroughly efficient, the audience will care but little for the nationality of either the composers or performers.

The Crystal Palace has well maintained the character it has earned for the production of high class musical works; and if we have protested against some of the experiments which have been tried in the course of the season it is only because we think that this is not an establishment where experiments should be tried. The choir is certainly improving; and if, as we have before suggested, this band of vocalists could be placed under a vigorous course of training by a competent professor, there can be little doubt that it would shortly arrive at a satisfactory state of efficiency. The "National Music Meetings," to speak candidly, we have always considered a mistake. Their beneficial effect upon art can scarcely be put forward as a reason for their continuance, and the thin attendance during the last season may be accepted as a proof of the little interest taken in the matter by the general public. An examination is a necessary but tedious ceremony, to which, in the welfare of art or science, accredited judges may cheerfully give their services; but to expect persons to pay to hear so unexciting an exhibition argues a belief in the abstract love of national education which can hardly be supported by the facts we see around us. Nevertheless the outlay of money in such a cause is highly creditable, and we congratulate the students who have received so many substantial prizes by such legitimate means.

The Alexandra Palace is perhaps feeling its way, and may eventually compete with its formidable rival on its own ground. Meanwhile we cannot but think that the Directors have made a mistake in going back, even if they were fearful at present of going forward. M. Jullien was a remarkable man in his day; but to imitate him now is to commit the error of endeavouring to supply the musical requirements of a time when Symphonies were received in solemn silence, and the Overture to the Midsummer Night's Dream was soundly hissed. The British Army Quadrille should have been buried with military honours when the reign of its composer ceased; for it is by studying, and not by reproducing, the events of history that we show how we have benefited by its lessons.

The "Monday Popular Concerts" have continued to draw large audiences, the best available talent having been secured for the performances, and the selection of works reflecting the highest credit upon the Directors. Mr. Henry Leslie has again displayed the efficiency of his finely-trained choir, whilst yielding also (perhaps somewhat too much) to the public demand for the exhibition of solo singers. The distinctive feature of Mr. Willem Coenen's "Chamber Concerts of Modern Music" has been steadily kept in view, and many works of much interest were given during his short season, those of Raff being especially worthy of notice. We must also mention the "Musical Evenings" given at St. George's Hall, the careful and artistic rendering of the best classical compositions by the promoters of these entertainments, aided by other competent artists, being indeed fully worthy of a more extended patronage than they received.

We know not how the affairs of the "Musical Association for the Investigation and Discussion of Subjects connected with the Art and Science of Music" are conducted; but if any member be allowed to read a paper and invite discussion upon his favourite topic, we fear for the ultimate success of the Society. Time is valuable, and it is necessary, therefore, that some selection should be made from the essays offered during the session. That a practical good may be obtained by the establishment of this Association should be the earnest wish of the members; and if, for instance, the reading of papers upon what is popularly termed the "Principles of Harmony" were to lead to the formation of a Congress of Musicians to decide upon a definite system which should be taught to every student, we should have good reason to be thankful for at least one good result from the deliberations of this Society.

The strong effort recently made to create a feeling of sympathy with what is termed the "National Training School for Music," at South Kensington, whilst the Royal Academy of Music, with its staff of professors, including nearly all the great names in the art, is flourishing in our midst, would be incredible were it not evident that the appeal is made solely to those who, engaged in mercantile pursuits, are really unaware of what is passing around them outside the circle of their daily life. It is of course to be deplored that aristocratic patronage and money support, instead of helping the body of artists in Tenterden Street, should be ranged against them; but even with the aid of the building "generously presented by Mr. Freake"—who evidently believes that a School for Training must necessarily be a Training School—we can scarcely think that a young and untried Institution can win the confidence of the public, in preference to one in which a matured system of tuition has so long secured, and is still securing, such noble and tangible artistic results.

The attempt to establish nightly concerts at the Royal Albert Hall deserves the thanks of all who desire that good music should become popularised in this country. But thanks alone will not support an undertaking which, like all artistic enterprises, must unfortunately be considered eventually from a commercial point of view; and those who showed the extent of their gratitude by attending the performances formed but a small number in comparison with those who wished them every success, and stayed at home. To prove, however, that the public will go to the Albert Hall when a special attraction is presented, we need only cite the circumstance of the extraordinary attendances at the representations of Verdi's Requiem, conducted by the composer, which was certainly one of the most remarkable events of the season. Whilst speaking of the performances given in this fine Concert Hall, we must not forget the great services rendered by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, which has steadily improved, under the intelligent guidance of the Conductor, Mr. Joseph Barnby, and not only most ably interpreted the choruses in Verdi's Requiem, but sustained the whole of the choral portions of the Oratorios given during the nightly concerts.

If the loss of the Hanover Square Rooms has in the slightest degree checked the number of Pianoforte Recitals and Benefit Concerts, we cannot but think that we have something to be thankful for. To "recite" a classical work in music requires as deep an insight into the meaning of its author, and as great a power of expressing that meaning as to recite a classical work in literature; and the mere faculty of playing the one, therefore, should rank no higher than the mere faculty of reading the other. When facility becomes so general it is time to begin to choose those whose exceptional gifts entitle them to a hearing; and we look forward, therefore, with hope that as the concerts decrease in quantity they may increase in quality. Meanwhile let us mention with all due respect those of Herr von Bülow, Mdlle. Krebs, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mr. Charles Hallé, and also that of Mr. Walter Bache, who has however not yet learnt the truth that an executive artist exceeds his duty when he presumes to dictate opinions to his auditors.

The "Musical Artists' Society" has supplied a want long existing, and fully earned its right to public notice. But amiable as is the weakness which prompts the recognition of talent in the works of your friends, it can scarcely be admitted as the basis of an Institution the object of which should be the progress of art; and unless, therefore, a competent council can be formed of those who are not claimants for a hearing of their works, we can scarcely expect any great result to flow from this Society. The ability of those who are enrolled as members, and the merits of the compositions hitherto produced have nothing whatever to do with the abstract question of how such an Association should be governed. No artistic venture seemed to promise more brilliantly than the "Society of British Musicians," and yet the composers of the present generation are perhaps scarcely aware that such a Society ever existed. Whilst giving every credit to the promoters of this new undertaking, therefore, let us hope that they will see the necessity of compelling artists to submit their works to the judgment of a jury from which there can be no appeal, and we may then found a school of English composition which shall not only reflect credit upon the Society, but be an honour to the nation.

The death of Sir Sterndale Bennett in the early part of the year was a serious blow to English musical art, for not only had his compositions taken the highest position in the land of his birth, but in Germany they were fully admitted as worthy to rank with the works of the most eminent composers. Standing at the head of our National Musical Academy, too, he was quietly effecting much good; for, with a modest and unostentatious manner, he was ever firm and resolute in his intention of inculcating a taste for those classical models of art which should form the basis of all musical education. The interment of his remains in Westminster Abbey was a tribute to his memory of which we should all feel proud, for it proved not only that his genius had made its way to the hearts of his countrymen, but that the art to which he devoted himself had grown into recognition by those whose power and influence alone could have secured such a national acknowledgment of his merits. By legitimate succession, Professor Macfarren now occupies the position of Principal in the Royal Academy of Music so worthily filled for some years by Sir Sterndale Bennett. Of his artistic fitness for this post there needs no assurance on our part; but when we add that to his high musical qualifications he unites an energy, a promptness of action, and an intelligent perception of the most effectual method of organising a perfect system of training, the brightest hopes for the future of this Institution may be confidently entertained; especially if the Government can be urged into the belief that to make England really a musical nation the chartered school for its rising artists must be encouraged to exertion by a liberal state support.

Considering that the Norwich Musical Festival is triennial, we cannot but feel a sense of disappointment at the want of novelty in the programme for the present year, which is given in another part of our journal. It is true that dependence was placed upon Mr. Sullivan's Cantata, "David and Jonathan," (which, in consequence of its composer's ill health, cannot be completed in time) and that an Overture written for the occasion by Mr. W. T. Best will be given; but surely an interval of three years is sufficient for an active committee either to secure some important new compositions, or to produce at least one of the many noble works of the old composers which have been so unaccountably neglected in this country. We have no desire to question the necessity of performing some of the standard sacred works—for a hearing of which no doubt several of the local patrons anxiously look forward—but these musical meetings are now on their trial in England; and if the character of the morning performances is not vigorously sustained, there will be a danger of the Festivals becoming degraded into an attractive series of evening miscellaneous concerts, supported by the favourite vocalists from those fashionable Temples of Art, the two Italian Opera Houses.

Only those who, like ourselves, have been staying in the neighbourhood of Worcester can form any idea of the indignation felt by the majority of persons resident in that locality at the suppression of the Three Choirs Festival for the present year. Of course in the apology for a Festival organised by the Dean and Chapter it was not thought necessary to appeal in the slightest degree to critical opinion; but as if to shut out the possibility of a visit from any who have hitherto reported the proceedings at these gatherings, the dates have been definitely fixed during the Norwich Festival week—the 22nd and 23rd inst. It would but little interest our readers to offer any comment upon the details of a scheme which is scarcely superior to the ordinary "Service of Song" occasionally given at less pretentious places; but one sentence from the preliminary announcement deserves quotation: "Admission is to be free of charge in all cases, but a portion of the Cathedral is to be reserved for holders of tickets, to be obtained on application to the Hon. Sec., J. H. Hooper, Esq., College Precincts." Why here we have the very exclusiveness provided for which has been complained of; for as these privileged ladies and gentlemen will be expected to give largely to the Offertory, the only difference between this and the former Festival will be that they pay for their tickets inside instead of outside the Cathedral.

Mr. John Hullah's Report on the Examination in Music of the Students of Training Colleges in Great Britain for the year 1874, shows that he is zealously pursuing the work before him, and only requires some little action on the part of "My Lords," under whom he acts, to effect a permanent good in this country. He very properly reprobates the want of system in teaching at some of the Colleges he visited, dwells on the ill effect of singing by ear, and earnestly advocates the use of the choral music of the great masters, instead of the slight part-songs which are still so extensively taught. Were the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education to trust implicitly to their Inspector, and act at once upon his suggestions, the study of music in England might be subjected to an uniform practical test which would be productive of the greatest benefit; but, judging from some recent experiences of the manner in which those high in position talk of music, although professedly knowing nothing about it, we fear that Mr. Hullah will find some little difficulty in fully carrying out his views.

We sincerely hope that the praiseworthy attempt of Mr. Turle to collect funds sufficient to restore the Latin inscription which formerly marked the grave of Purcell in Westminster Abbey, will be liberally responded to. In addition to the desire of thus indicating the last resting-place of our great English composer, Mr. Turle has expressed his intention of handing any balance which may remain in his hands —after effecting the object in view—to the Royal Academy of Music, for the purpose of founding a prize or scholarship that shall bear the name of Purcell.

Earl Granville and Sir Henry Cole had recently a grand field-day at Dover, the object being to collect funds for a scholarship in the aristocratic National Training School at South Kensington. Those who attended the meeting, as usual, knowing nothing whatever of the subject under discussion, were enthusiastic in support of a cause which they had been previously informed was heartily supported by Royalty, and the scholarship was forthwith secured. It is curious, however, that Earl Granville, in speaking of the late Duke of Wellington,—whom we have usually seen fast asleep at the "Antient Concerts"—should have mentioned him as a warm patron of the Royal Academy of Music, and then called upon his hearers to do all in their power to crush the very Institution he encouraged, especially when it is known to all musical people that the Academy since his time has been gradually gaining in importance and usefulness. Of course we are aware that the increasing success of the real "National Training School," in Tenterden Street, is a serious difficulty in the way of the noble promoters of the new undertaking; but we cannot believe that it is a good plan to utterly ignore its existence at a public meeting, in the hope that nobody will be rash enough to mention the fact, and boldly enquire what in the name of common sense is the object of dividing the musical patronage of the country.

The appointment of Dr. Bridge to the post of organist at Westminster Abbey—vacant by the retirement of Mr. Turle,—will be welcomed by all interested in the cause of church music. The improvement in the services at Manchester Cathedral since Dr. Bridge has held the position of organist, may be regarded as a proof that he will do his utmost in the responsible office which he has now accepted to advance the character of the music in the Abbey; and we sincerely hope that the Dean and Chapter will allow him that unlimited power over the choir which may enable him to raise it to the high state of efficiency which the public has a right to expect.

Those who frequent Operas and Concerts in the metropolis must be surprised at the following announcement, issued by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels: "This great company now numbers in its ranks some of the finest vocalists in England: its instrumentalists have all been selected from the orchestras of the two Opera houses and the Philharmonic Society." This notification of the fact that it is necessary to attend the smaller room at St. James's Hall to hear "some of the finest vocalists in England" should have the effect of drawing all real music lovers to the Moore and Burgess concerts; but when we are also told that the "instrumentalists have all been selected from the orchestras of the two Opera houses and the Philharmonic Society," for the first time we find how grossly we have been deceived in imagining that we are listening to the best orchestral players in our favourite bands. Sir Michael Costa, Signor Vianesi, Signor Bevignani, and Mr. Cusins have certainly done wonders during an arduous season, considering that they have had to work with an orchestra from which the band of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels had been previously "selected;" but in future years it would be well to consider whether the principal instrumentalists should not be definitely secured for the Operas and Philharmonic Society before they have been weaned away by those enterprising caterers for the public who "never perform out of St. James's Hall."

The proceedings of the "Musical Association for the Investigation and Discussion of Subjects connected with the Art and Science of Music" have been printed and forwarded for notice. It is difficult to give our readers any idea of the various matters treated of by extracts from the papers read before the Society; but a few quotations may prove of interest. Dr. W. H. Stone, in his opening lecture, "On extending the compass and increasing the tone of stringed instruments," states that he had been for several years endeavouring to extend the compass of orchestral instruments downwards: "In the wind department he might say that he had succeeded, by introducing an old instrument, the contra-fagotto, remodelled, and, he hoped, improved. He had found the same want in the string department. He had exhibited a double bass, strung down to the same pitch, CCC on the organ, in the Exhibition of 1872. The note was frequently used by Beethoven, Onslow, and other great writers; while Gounod used even the B flat below. The author said his object had been to obtain the low notes of the 16ft.

octave without increasing the size of the instrument. There were three ways in which a string might be made to give these slow vibrations: first, by increased length; secondly, by increased thickness; thirdly, by increased weight—the last of which had been too much overlooked. The result of the first plan of increased length can be seen in the monster double-bass of the late Duke of Leinster at South Kensington, which would require a giant to play it. The first plan, then, did not answer. He next tried increase of thickness, but found that this also failed, owing to its aptness to produce squeaks, in consequence of transverse vibration. The other means was to increase the specific gravity of the string. It was this third plan which he had adopted. The gut string was covered with heavy copper-wire, like the bass strings of a pianoforte; and this proved to be fairly successful, though probably gold or platinum would answer still better. The double-bass shown at South Kensington was rather lacking in tone, as more resonance was wanted to bring it out fully, and this had led to his consulting Mr. Meeson as to the possibility of reinforcing the vibrations by means of longitudinal struts or bars. It was evident the belly of the instrument required to be made more homogeneous to vibration, and stiffer without increasing its weight or bulk. Mr. Meeson had carried out this idea most ingeniously. Four strips of white deal, curved to an elliptical figure, pass parallel, from end to end, on the inside of the belly. Thus they intercept the S-shaped sound-holes and remove a well-known cause of weakness and a break in the vibrating body. The result is the removal of what the musicians term 'wolf,' or inequality and falseness of tone, with a great increase of power throughout the instrument. It had since appeared that the same process is equally applicable to the smaller members of the violin family, and the author asserted that by its adoption a common instrument can be made nearly equal in tone to an old Italian fiddle, while it strengthens the tone of old instruments in which, from decay or other causes, the power is small. The application of the process in no way damages an instrument, and the bars can be removed at pleasure."

Mr. Sedley Taylor's paper "On a suggested simplification of the established Pitch-notation," deals most ably with the subject. The only portion, however, that we can quote is when after saying that a notation should indicate tonic intervals, and that these intervals should be natural, not tempered ones, he proceeds to show how far the established notation satisfies these requirements. "As long as we keep to the key of C, tonic intervals are clearly and directly exhibited by the established notation. They can be counted off from the starting-point indicated by the clef with all the facility to be desired. But when other keys have to be represented by it, this is no longer the case. We are then merely directed to widen or narrow some—or possibly all—of the intervals of the C scale, by certain symbols prefixed to the corresponding notes of that scale. That in this manner fresh scales similar to the C scale are obtained is a fact of independent experience, which, as far as anything contained in the notation is concerned, might equally well not be true at all. An easy rule, no doubt, enables us to determine whether any (and if so what) key a particular group of accidentals indicates, but the rule is based on information which these symbols themselves do not completely convey. There is nothing on the face of the notation to tell us where the tonic is, and, in the absence of such an indication, no resource but still to read all intervals off from the original starting-point C. A huge and perfectly gratuitous complication is thus introduced into a very simple matter. The sounds of a melody are no longer referred to their own tonic, but to a different note which has no real claim to their allegiance. This is very much as if the Acts of existing Parliaments were couched in language implying that not Victoria but William the Conqueror now sat on the throne of England. It is ignoring the live tonic in order by an artificial phraseology to make a dead tonic appear to breathe and govern. By a process of this description the simplest relation may be made to look complicated. Suppose I take two pieces of wood, and by merely placing them side by side ascertain that one is just twice as long as the other. So far, nothing can be more simple. But, then, an adherent of the absolute-length theory comes up and insists that both sticks shall be measured and their lengths expressed in standard feet, inches, and fractions of inches. We will suppose that this is done, and that the results come out five feet one inch and three-quarters of an inch, and two feet six inches and seven-eighths of an inch, respectively. All simplicity is, by this arrangement, entirely got rid of, and the fact that one stick is twice as long as the other—the only thing it was really essential to communicate—is buried under a heap of intrusive arithmetic, from which nothing less than a sum in compound division of vulgar fractions will suffice to unearth it."

Dr. Stainer gives a most interesting lecture "On the principles of Musical Notation," from which we make an extract which it would be well if the Tonic Sol-faists, who advocate the use of their notation for instrumental as well as vocal music, would ponder well:—"But an important question here presents itself to us: Do we require one and the same system of notation for voices and instruments? I think not; for this reason: I believe that in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, the first impulse of a singer is, when a vocal part is placed before him, to consider the relations of the sounds to the key-scale, and to each other. I am equally certain that an instrumentalist instinctively looks upon a note as representing a locality: if he is a pianist, it represents to him the position of a certain black or white key; if a violinist, the position his fingers should take on a string. For example, suppose I write a piece in the key of C, but on trial, I think it not quite bright enough, and rewrite it in C♯. The singers have precisely the same parts to sing, they are only slightly altered in pitch—so slightly, that probably not one in a hundred observes it; yet, in the Staff notation, I have taken them from the simplest known key into one which has seven sharps in the signature, involving double-sharps and all kinds of abstruse signs in modulating. What have the poor singers done, that they should, because singing my work a mere trifle higher in pitch, be dragged from the pure sunlight of the key of C into the tangled mazes of seven-sharps-C and its related keys? The Tonic Sol-faist does not play singers such a mean trick as this: he merely puts his pen through the expression Key of C, and writes Key of C♯ in its place; all his Letter notation remains precisely what it was before. This is of course an extreme case, but stated thus broadly, it gives the Letter notation for vocal parts an advantage over the Staff which is immense. But with instrumental music the case is far otherwise. Suppose, if you please, that my violin accompaniments to this hypothetical composition in the key of C were copied in Letter notation. I write as before, not Key of C, but, instead, Key of C♯; then, every single point on the strings becomes to the player moved,—his fingers cannot cross his strings at the same point as before; he has to think out as he plays, not only the relative pitch of the letters to each other, but a new problem—namely, whereabouts on the strings the altered pitch will take him. No wonder that a Tonic Sol-fa violinist should be dazed, seeing that he must contemplate his four strings as containing an infinity of potential Dohs. So, too, in the case of the pianoforte: a movement in the key of C written in Letter notation is totally changed for the performer, by saying Key of C♯, instead of Key of C—thumbs will not be able to go under fingers where they did before, nor will they be able to take the same position as before, in chords or arpeggios. This inaptitude of Letter notation for instrumental music must, I think, be conceded even by its warmest advocates. But, why not publish well-known oratorios, with voice-parts in Letter notation, and accompaniment in Staff notation?"

Mr. Alexander John Ellis concludes his paper on "Just and tempered Intonation" with the following remarks, which, although many composers, at least, may not endorse, prove his thorough faith in the necessity of gradually abolishing what is known as "equal temperament":—

"Intonation has always been considered as of the utmost practical importance, because it affects the sound of every chord struck. Just intonation gives a gradation from perfect consonance to intense dissonance, unattainable strictly by any temperament, and especially unattained by equal temperament, which cannot produce a single triad without conspicuously dissonant beats, on any qualities of tone suitable for sustained musical expression, such as those of the voice, bowed or reed instruments.

"The history of temperament may be condensed into a few sentences. The Greek intonation was perfect for melody, and impossible for harmony, as even the Greeks themselves acknowledge that all its thirds were dissonant. Down to the eleventh century the Greek intonation influenced everything. Guido d'Arezzo then exercised his pupils by the monochord, presumably in just intonation, which offered no theoretical or mechanical difficulties as long as modulation was confined to passing from the key of C major to those of F and G major, or, provided the dominant chords were left minor, into A and E minor. It was not till the middle of the sixteenth century when either Salinas or Zarlino (for they dispute the honour) invented the mean-tone temperament, that it became possible for the organ to modulate into B flat, and into G and A major, and into A minor, with partial effects of D and even G minor, all with major dominants. But the wheel of modulation once started, it could not stop here. C minor and F minor, and E major and E flat major soon became indispensable. The organist then struck G sharp for A flat, and so on, and produced those howlings which soon gained the name of 'wolves,' and wondrous efforts were made to avoid them. At last Sebastian Bach, in the middle of the eighteenth century, adopted an expedient previously suggested, and sharpened his major thirds. Finally, his son Emanuel, in 1753, announced his 'wohl temperirtes Clavier,' his 'well-tempered clavichord,' which became the parent of our present (intentionally) equally-tempered pianoforte, and it is to the peculiar adaptability of the tones of this instrument for disguising the defects of such a method of tuning that the general acceptance of that temperament is probably due. On the organ the shortcomings of this intonation were too manifest for them to be at once accepted as satisfactory, and the long struggle between the old organ-tuning and the new is not yet quite over. The great organ of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, built so lately as 1855, was tuned to the mean-tone temperament, and it was not till 1867 that it was re-tuned in equal temperament, for the purpose of playing with orchestras. (Choir, 27th February, 1875, p.131.) Equal temperament, or what tuners give us for it (a very different thing, generally), has indeed become a temporary necessity. If we will play no more than twelve sounds in an octave, we cannot avoid the fearful 'wolves' in certain keys, now rather favoured, without introducing minor 'wolves' in every key. But the discoveries of Helmholtz have sounded the knell of equal temperament, which must henceforth be recognised as a theoretical mistake and a practical makeshift—a good servant dismissed for becoming a bad master, and now merely retaining office till his successor is installed. The human voice, the violin, and the trombone do not require it, and will enable the composer to study the wondrous wealth of just intonation as a means of musical expression, when the laws of just modulation have been laid down. After Helmholtz's discoveries, they become comparatively easy to formulate, and in an Appendix to my translation of his work, I have endeavoured to follow out the hints he has given. There is really no theoretical difficulty left, either in notation, or the relations of tone, or the mechanical production of the notes required. For vocal execution just intonation is rendered easy by a constant reference of every sound to a known tonality, provided singers eschew the piano. For bowed instruments the same feeling cannot but lead to the same result, and similarly for trombones, because the ear so readily perceives and rejects the intrusion of inexact tones in harmony. Mr. Bosanquet's finger-board enables even organs and harmoniums to produce practically just intonation. I am unable to speak as to the wood and other brass of the orchestra. But they must certainly follow the lead, or be left out of the race. At any rate just intonation, even upon a large scale, is immediately possible. And if I long for the time of its adoption, in the interests of the listener, still more do I long for it in the interests of the composer. What he has done of late years with the rough-and-ready tool of equal temperament is a glorious presage of what he will do in the future with the delicate instrument which acoustical science puts into his hands. The temporary necessity for equal temperament is passing away. Its defects have been proved to be ineradicable, because inherent in the nature of sound. An intonation possessing none of these defects has been scientifically demonstrated. It is feasible now on the three noblest sources of musical sound,—the quartet of voices, the quartet of bowed instruments, and the quartet of trombones. The issue is in the hands of the composer. Can any one doubt the result?"

Our readers will be glad to hear that a new edition of Sir John Hawkins's valuable and comprehensive "History of Music" is about to be issued by Messrs. Novello; the work will not only be printed on better and larger paper, but will be considerably reduced in price.

In an article on the past musical season, the musical critic of the Standard writes as follows:—"Almost simultaneously with the commencement of the Popular Concerts, Messrs. Novello and Co. inaugurated their series of concerts at the Albert Hall. From the 7th of November to Boxing-day they gave a concert there every evening. The Mondays were devoted to 'Ballads,' Tuesdays to 'English' music, Wednesdays to 'Classical' music, Thursdays to 'Oratorio,' Fridays to 'Modern German' music, and Saturdays to 'Popular' music, and with immense energy and spirit this scheme was adhered to for two months. Their success was not by any means commensurate with their deserts, and after Christmas the performances were reduced to two a week. A little later all attempts to keep to a fixed arrangement was dropped, and concerts were only given occasionally, though still on the same complete scale. Mr. Barnby, to whom the entire management was entrusted, engaged a thoroughly efficient band of between sixty and seventy performers, and throughout the season the orchestral performances were of very high excellence. They would probably have been still better if the conductor had been always the same, but under three or four different conductors it was impossible that the band should always play alike. Mr. Barnby conducted the Classical and Oratorio concerts, Mr. J. F. Barnett the English music, and Mr. Dannreuther the modern German programmes, while very frequently the orchestral accompaniments to vocal solos were conducted by Mr. Randegger. The classical concerts were very admirable performances, Beethoven's, Mendelssohn's, and other symphonies, and many of the finest overtures being played as well as one need wish to hear them, and concertos played by all the best solo performers in London, were given during the season. The English concerts, under Mr. J. F. Barnett's direction, furnished opportunities for the performance of orchestral works by native composers that merit a hearing far more often than they usually obtain one. It was at these concerts that the first performances were given in London of the three pieces composed for the Liverpool Musical Festival of 1874. Mr. Barnett's descriptive piece for the orchestra, 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel,' Professor Oakeley's 'Edinburgh March,' and Mr. Macfarren's 'Festival Overture,' Mr. W. G. Cusins's pianoforte concerto in A minor, Benedict's symphony in G minor, Sterndale Bennett's overtures, Gadsby's overture 'Andromeda,' Sullivan's overtures 'The Sapphire Necklace' and 'In Memoriam,' besides many other English compositions, were performed. Mr. Barnby's Royal Albert Hall Choral Society formed the chorus on the oratorio nights, and fully sustained their reputation. Mdlle. Johanna Levier made her début at these concerts, and rapidly worked her way into public favour. Here, too, Herr Wilhelmj made his first appearance after an absence from England of several years, and at these performances he was to be heard very frequently; and Mr. Whitney, the American basso, did good service here all through the season, more especially in the part of Elijah in Mendelssohn's Oratorio, and in the bass music of Handel's Messiah. On the 15th May, after a long series of careful rehearsals, Verdi's Requiem was produced at the Albert Hall, and four performances were given. The band was considerably increased, and the Albert Hall Choral Society formed a thoroughly efficient chorus. Signor Verdi himself conducted every performance, having come to London for the special purpose. There were Mesdames Stolz and Waldmann, and Signori Masini and Medini, of whom the three first mentioned had not before been heard in England. The production of a sacred work by Verdi excited a feeling of considerable curiosity, and the great hall was more or less crowded at every representation, but especially at the last performance, when so large was the assemblage of would-be auditors, that nearly as many were turned away from the doors as could be accommodated in the building."

We have elsewhere in our present number commented upon the so-called "Festival of the Three Choirs" at Worcester, and now give the names of the principal works to be performed during the two days, as stated in the official announcement forwarded to us: Wednesday the 22nd inst., at 8.30, Townshend Smith's Anthem, "O how amiable," and Tallis's "Litany;" at 11, full choral service, S. S. Wesley's "Te Deum" and "Jubilate" in E, Mendelssohn's Cantata "Not unto us," and Gibbons's Anthem "O clap your hands;" at 3.30, full choral service: Walmisley's "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis," in B flat, S. S. Wesley's Anthem, "Let us lift up," and Spohr's Cantata "God, Thou art great." Thursday at 11, full choral service: Mendelssohn's "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," in A; S. S. Wesley's Anthem, "The Wilderness," and Handel's Anthem, "O praise the Lord" (Chandos collection). At 3.30, full choral service; Attwood's "Cantate Domino" and "Deus Misereatur," in D, Mendelssohn's Anthem "Hear my prayer," and Spohr's Festival Anthem, "How lovely are Thy dwellings." The organ, which is to be the only accompaniment, will be presided at by Dr. S. S. Wesley and Mr. Townshend Smith, Mr. Done, being of course, Conductor. As our readers are perfectly aware of the facts of the case, it will be quite unnecessary to say anything about what is termed in this statement "the unfortunate differences of opinion," which have led to the abolition of the old form of Festival, at least for the present year.

We regret sincerely to record the decease of Dr. Hermann Härtel, a partner in the well-known firm of Breitkopf and Härtel, in Leipsic. His brother, Herr Raimand, is now the only one bearing the time-honoured name of Härtel in the firm.

At the August concert of the St. George's Glee Union, at the Pimlico Rooms, the most successful efforts of the choir were in "The sea hath its pearls," "In these delightful, pleasant groves," and "O were I but a drop of dew." Miss Clara Buley sang "Ah quel giorno" with great success. Mr. Frank Amor gave "O rosy hours" and "To Anthea" with satisfactory effect, the latter song being especially well received. Mr. Williams sang "The soldier's dream" with much taste; and the concert also included a pianoforte solo well played by Mr. G. F. Smith. Mr. T. Garside conducted.

The accounts of the rehearsals of Wagner's Ring des Nibelungen, at Bayreuth, during the past month, prove how earnestly his ideas are carried out by those who have faith in his mission. Although the performance is not to take place until this time next year, all the principal vocalists have been present, and the rehearsals are said to have commenced with an orchestra of 150 performers. The scenery, costumes, and machinery are entrusted to the most experienced hands; and were it not for the fact of Herr Niemann, the tenor, having thrown up his engagement—owing, as it is alleged, to a quarrel with the composer—all would seem to progress favourably towards the realisation of Wagner's brightest hopes.

Although English Opera has been performed at the Gaiety Theatre, the works given are so well worn as to call for no comment. Miss Blanche Cole may delight in playing night after night in the "Bohemian Girl," "Maritana," and the "Rose of Castile," but it is too much to expect that those interested in the progress of art can do more than place upon record that such performances have taken place. Meanwhile we must look for better things at the Princess's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Carl Rosa.

Mr. Charles E. Fry has been appointed Secretary to the Choir Benevolent Fund.

The Norwich Musical Festival, which commences on the 20th inst., although destitute almost of novelty, presents a programme of interest to those residents in the neighbourhood who but rarely visit the metropolis. At the morning performances Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and "Hymn of Praise," Spohr's "God Thou art Great," a selection from Pierson's "Jerusalem," Haydn's "Imperial Mass," Sir W. S. Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," and Handel's "Messiah" will be given; and the concerts in the evening will include Randegger's "Fridolin," Benedict's "Legend of St. Cecilia," Pastorale, and Finale from Symphony in C; Macfarren's "Festival Overture," Cowen's "Nocturne," Grand March from "Joan of Arc," and a new Overture composed for the Festival by W. T. Best. The vocalists engaged are Mdlle. E. Albani, Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. Enequist, Mdlle. Anna de Belocca, Mdme. Patey, Miss Enriquez, Messrs. E. Lloyd, H. Guy, H. J. Minns, J. L. Wadmore, and Signor Foli. Sir Julius Benedict, will, as usual, be the Conductor.

A testimonial, consisting of a handsome Ormolu drawing-room clock and silver sugar-basin, has been recently presented to George Calkin, Esq., for twenty-five years organist of St. Mark's Church, Regent's Park, by the Clergy, Churchwardens, and various members of the Church, in testimony of their appreciation of his services, and high personal esteem.

We read in the New York Sun that Samuel Priestly Taylor, the oldest Organist in the world, was recently buried from St. Peter's Episcopal Church in Brooklyn, his five aged children being the chief mourners, and a throng of musicians and organists filling the seats. Mr. Taylor was born in London in 1779, and was the eldest son of the Rev. James Taylor, a well-known clergyman in the latter part of the eighteenth century. He was taught music by Whittaker and Dr. Russell, of Oxford; and before he was seven years old he sang in the boy choir in Surrey Chapel. When he was seven he played an organ accompaniment for the choir in the Cumberland Street Chapel, of which his father was Rector. He was married in 1804, and his wife, who died three years ago in her eighty-sixth year, bore him nine children, five of whom still live. He came to New York in 1806, and was organist in Christ Church in Ann Street, and under the sanction of Bishop Moore, introduced chanting into that parish. He played the clarionet and kettledrum in the band in the American garrison in New York in the war of 1812, and on account of this service received 96 dollars a year up to his death. He was president of the old musical organization—now the prosperous Philharmonic Society—in 1812. He last appeared in public ten years ago, when in his eighty-sixth year he played Luther's "Judgment Hymn" in Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, for a chorus of 100 voices. A year and a half ago the Handel and Haydn Society of Brooklyn gave him a testimonial concert in Plymouth Church.

The Promenade Concerts which have been commenced at Covent Garden Theatre, under the management of the Messrs. Gatti, will sufficiently provide London with music during the dull months of the year. Some good works are given nightly; and the band, skilfully directed by Signor Arditi, contains many of our very best orchestral players. Amongst the vocalists Mdlle. Bianchi and Mdlle. Cristino have been accorded a warm reception, and Signor Rendano (pianoforte) and M. Jules de Swert (violoncello) have performed solos with marked success. Remembering the nonsense presumed to be descriptive of the "Ashantee war," which was given at these concerts last year, we are glad to find that the present season was inaugurated by an instrumental selection from "Lohengrin."

At the Church Congress, which is to be held this year at Stoke-on-Trent, the speakers on Church Music will be the Rev. J. Ellerton, Rev. S. J. Stone, and Mr. E. J. Hopkins. The subject will be "Hymns and Hymn singing."

We have to announce the death of Mr. William Marshall, Mus. Doc., Oxon., which occurred at Handsworth, Staffordshire, on the 17th ult. The deceased musician was in his youth a chorister at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, and afterwards filled the posts of Organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, and St. Mary's, Kidderminster.

We (Concordia) understand that Mdlle. Torriani, who made a successful appearance at Her Majesty's Opera three years ago, will be one of the prime donne in Mr. Carl Rosa's English Opera Company. Mdlle. Torriani is a German, and was born in Hamburg, the native town of Mdlle. Titiens; she has played with considerable success at the principal theatres in Italy, but made her principal mark in Verdi's Aïda. Speaking of her performance in this work, the New York Evening Bulletin says:—"Mdlle. Torriani has a most difficult rôle, but her voice is so sympathetic, her method so pure and her acting so good, that she leaves nothing to be desired. This young lady is certainly destined to take a place in the very front rank of prime donne. All the effects she produces are legitimate. There is no overstraining of the voice, no extravagance in action, and no striving to produce startling sensations. In creating the part of Aïda and singing the trying, severe music so well, she shows real genius."

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Manfred. A Dramatic Poem, in Three Acts. By Lord Byron. Music by Robert Schumann.

THE increasing knowledge and appreciation of Schumann's music in this country is a proof that the present volume will be acceptable to a wide circle of artists and amateurs. Those who know the dramatic power shown in this composer's setting of portions of Goethe's "Faust" may imagine that Byron's "Manfred" is just the poem to inspire original and vigorous thought; and although we can scarcely perhaps pronounce it fully equal to the former work, many of the scenes are coloured with a fidelity and poetic beauty which cannot fail to be felt by every sympathetic listener. The Overture is already well known; and we need only say, therefore, that the pianoforte arrangement recalls most vividly the many charming orchestral effects with which it abounds. The "Song of the Spirits," with solos for soprano, alto, tenor and bass, is admirably suggestive of the subject; and the Recitative for Manfred, with the syncopated accompaniment, gives much force to the impressive words addressed to the magic figure. The Incantation, for four bass voices, in E flat minor, has real dramatic feeling throughout; and the lovely Ranz des Vaches, the shepherd's pipe being heard in the distance, concludes the first act with much effect. A short Entr'Acte, followed by Manfred's Recitative, calling on the Witch of the Alps, lead to an excellent piece of four-part writing—the "Hymn of the Spirits of Arimanes"— in D minor, which is admirably descriptive of the text. A couple of short choruses of Spirits then occur, two Recitatives terminating the act; the second, especially, ending with the disappearance of Astarte, being spoken to a most melodious and sympathetic strain. A string of Recitative runs through the greater part of the third act, the instrumental colouring to which invests it with much interest, and the final Requiem, sung behind the scenes, makes a worthy conclusion to a composition which, when better known, must certainly enhance the reputation of Schumann in England.

Stabat Mater. Set to Music, for Female voices, by Giovanni Battista Pergolesi. Edited, and the Pianoforte accompaniment arranged, by John Hullah.

MR. HULLAH'S prefatory remarks to this edition of Pergolesi's "Stabat" give an additional interest to the book; and those who know but little of its composer may be stimulated by the fact of his flourishing during what the Editor terms the "transition period" to search through his music for the proofs that he worked, according to Mr. Hullah, amongst those artists who, "however willing to take to new ways, were still evidently unable altogether to put off those in which they had been brought up." Certainly the avoidance of the discord of the dominant seventh in its direct state, and the constant use of its inversions, is a characteristic well worthy of observation, as also the preference of the tonal to the real fugue, although in Pergolesi's time the latter was well known. In passing carefully through this work all must be struck with the sympathetic setting of the words; and it seems strange indeed that we should be constantly striving after novelty when such treasures in art are ready for our use, and comparatively indeed unknown to modern audiences. Amongst other movements, we would particularly call attention to the opening chorus "Stabat Mater," the contralto solo, "Quæ mærebat et dolebat," the Duo, "Quis est homo"—the beautiful change from C minor to the relative major on the words "Pro peccatis," with the undulating movement of quavers in the accompaniment forming an especial feature of the number—the contralto solo, "Eia mater," the two Duos, "Sancta mater," and "Quando corpus," and the final chorus, "Amen," all of which are written with a purity and depth of religious feeling faithfully reflecting the time when the highest aspiration of a composer was to use his art solely for the glorification of his church. That the task of editing this work was truly a labour of love may be gathered from Mr. Hullah's concluding words in his preface, which we have much pleasure in quoting: "The labour of preparing it for publication will have been amply rewarded should it prove to have done anything to interrupt the 'mill-horse round' in which the English musical public are still content to tread; neglectful because ignorant, and ignorant because neglectful, alike of some of the most precious productions of those composers with a few only of whose works they are (if possible) too familiar, as of innumerable others, hardly inferior, by masters whose very names are unknown to them." We only hope that the exertions of so earnest a disciple of legitimate art may be repaid as they deserve.

Funeral March. Composed by Herbert S. Oakeley.

THE full score and pianoforte arrangement of this March are now before us; and although the latter conveys but a faint idea of the many effective points in the orchestral version, we are bound to say that it is as admirably laid out for the solo instrument as can be expected. Considering the many eminent men who have left us undying specimens of this class of composition, a "Funeral March" is a somewhat hazardous work to attempt; but Professor Oakeley's ambition rarely leads him to overtask his powers; and when we say that, although not displaying much originality of thought, his latest contribution is in every respect worthy of his reputation as an earnest and conscientious artist, we have said all that perhaps its composer might expect at the hands of a candid and impartial critic. The introduction, commencing with muffled drums, leads effectively to the subject of the March, in C minor, with the creeping crotchet accompaniment for the basses; and the theme of the Trio, in the tonic major, steals in with much freshness, the first bassoon and oboe strengthening the melody given forth by the violin, the basses playing a staccato quaver accompaniment, doubled by the second bassoon in legato crotchets, the horns meanwhile holding the low C pedal note. The return to the minor, with the introduction shortened, brings the March to a satisfactory termination, the final bars, however, ending in the major. We hope and believe that we may shortly hear this composition, with a good orchestra, in the Metropolis.

Improved System of Counting Time. Arranged by M. E. Doorly, Organist of St. Michael's Cathedral, Barbados.

As this system of counting time is said to be "arranged" by Mr. Doorly, we know not if he is the inventor of it; but there can be no question that were the divisions of the subject only headed Duple, Quadruple, and Triple, a very clear insight into the matter would be gained by the student. That 3-2 time has "sometimes 6" beats in a bar we are inclined to dispute; it being, according to our theory, utterly wrong to count an even number in uneven time; but we do not see that in the examples given this system is ever acted upon. We are inclined to believe that if the method of counting here advocated were universally taught, we should never have that confusion between quantity and rhythm which we find amongst the majority of young pupils. Beats, Mr. Doorly says, are counted One, two, three, four, &c.; Half-beats, one-half, two-half, &c.; Quarter-beats, one-and-half, and; two-and-half-and, &c.; Thirds of beats, one-trip-let, two-trip-let, &c.; Sixths of beats (Thirds of half-beats), one-trip-let, half-trip-let, &c.; Sixths of beats (Halves of Thirds of beats), one-and-trip-and-let-and, &c. All this may seem very strange to those who have been for years accustomed to another system (or perhaps we might rather say to a want of system) but it is thoroughly true, and in all cases represents the measure of the bar. Mr. Doorly deserves every credit for his endeavour to simplify this subject; and we commend this little publication to the attention of teachers.

Unrest in rest. Song. The words by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A. The music composed by A. H. Mann, Mus. Bac. Oxon.

Mr. Mann has written a song which should become a favourite with vocalists and listeners, for he has appealed to both with equal success. The smooth syncopated symphony, in A minor, carried on as an accompaniment through the voice part, until the quicker subject in the dominant commences, is a happy idea; and the flowing quavers, against the holding notes in the melody, have an excellent effect as a contrast. We do not see why, at the change into E major, the signature should not have been altered—more especially as this is done in the second verse; for to amateurs the long array of sharps may appear somewhat formidable. Apart from the appropriate theme to which the Rev. Mr. Troutbeck's excellent words are set, every praise is due to the composer for the musicianlike manner in which the harmonies are written; for although constantly varying, they have always the effect of enriching, and never disturbing, the voice. Tenors will, we are certain, thank us for calling their attention to this song which, by the title-page, we find has already been sung by Mr. Vernon Rigby.

The love that loves me not. Song. Words by W. S. Gilbert. Music by Arthur Sullivan.

The truthful expression of the words is a characteristic of Mr. Sullivan's songs—and indeed of all his vocal music—which cannot escape observation; and we must commence our notice of this melodious composition by awarding him unqualified praise for the manner in which the varied feelings are coloured in a song which, being written in the true ballad form of two verses, precisely alike in the musical setting, presents a difficulty to the composer rarely successfully met. The theme, commencing in F minor, doubled in the bass part of the first bar, is extremely sympathetic with the first line of the poetry; and the lingering upon the dominant, before the change into the tonic major, is a point which, as we have already indicated, is as effective in the second verse as the first. Apart from its purely artistic merits, this song contains all the elements of popularity, and we cannot doubt its effect when sung before a mixed audience, even when it does not receive so exceptionally fine a rendering as that by Mr. Sims Reeves, who has already introduced it to the public.

Daily Exercises for the Voice. (First Set.) By J. Stainer.

We are rather in favour of the publication of Exercises for the voice in this form. Voluminous works are apt to frighten students, and it is always dangerous to allow them to make selections for themselves. It is not desirable too that they should see all they have to do, but rather what it is good for them to do at first; and the ten Exercises before us—supposing that they are preceded by sustained notes and scales—will be found of the utmost use. They are here all written in the key of E flat, but are intended to be transposed according to the compass of the voice. Comprehending very many of the difficulties ordinarily experienced by pupils, they will yet be felt, even by untrained singers, to be extremely vocal; and their melodious character will make them additionally attractive. We perceive that this is only the first of a series, but have no indication as to the number of sets which it is the intention of the author to issue.

Joseph Williams.

The Fishermaiden. (Meyerbeer.) Transcribed for the Pianoforte by George Jackson.

Another of those "Transcriptions" which cease to justify their title by developing into Fantasias. Mr. Jackson has chosen a charming theme upon which to exercise his talents, for we have always considered this one of Meyerbeer's very best songs; but it would have been better if the "young ladies at Miss Lucock's Establishment," to whom the piece is dedicated, had been content with the song, or at least an unpretentious transcription of it, instead of having their attention directed to a series of arpeggios, with the theme swimming at the top. The multiplication of this sort of music can really do no good, and may do a vast amount of harm; and we cannot therefore recommend even so carefully written and favourable a specimen as the one before us, in the conscientious discharge of our duties to those who place faith in our judgment.

Air Ecossais (Robin Adair) pour le Piano.
Havanaise. Melodie de E. Paladilhe. Improvisation pour Piano.
Par Ch. Neustedt.

These two pieces have at least the merit of being what they profess to be, the first being called No. 1 of "Transcriptions variées," and the second an Improvisation upon a theme by Paladilhe. Again the well-worn pattern of arpeggios, however, in the "Robin Adair" variations, is used to cover the want of inventive power; and except to those, therefore, who are satisfied with such conventional passages, there is little to create any interest. The second piece is somewhat better, simply because the materials used are less hackneyed. We shall be glad when those who write "drawing-room pieces" see the necessity either of writing original music or of varying other persons' themes with so much cleverness that, as in the works of the old masters, the subject taken shall be the least attractive portion of the composition.

From Dark to Dawn. Song. Written by Charles J. Rowe. Composed by Elizabeth Philp.

This song may be taken as a very fair type of a class of composition which has obtained a wide popularity; and although its perfectly harmless character renders any criticism almost superfluous, the composer would scarcely perhaps be content if, when sent for review, it were passed over in the crowd. Miss Philp is a well-known writer, and may reasonably say that one whose compositions have so won the favour of a section of the public has a right to be aided in her career by those artistic journals which are presumed, partially at least, to direct musical taste. Here, however, we beg to differ with her. A song such as the one before us, containing a common-place vocal melody, properly dressed up with the three principal chords of the scale, advertises itself; for it supplies a want, and those who desire it will purchase it, knowing that the name of its composer is a sufficient guarantee of its effect upon those listeners to whom they submit it. To seek an opinion, therefore, from those whose duty it should be to criticise works of art, is scarcely fair; for as it offends no rules of musical grammar, an unqualified verdict in its favour (which may justly be given) might be accepted by readers as conveying much more praise than was really intended. Let us, therefore, merely record, in conventional language, that in "From Dark to Dawn" Miss Philp has "thoroughly sustained her reputation."

JAMES F. PETTIT.

Simple Studies for the Pianoforte. Nos. 2 and 3. Composed by William H. Hunt.

As six of these "Simple Studies" appear to have been already published, it seems strange that two only should have been forwarded to us; for considering that as progressive Exercises only should they be judged, we can have but little power of returning a verdict upon the real merit of the general design of the work. Nos. 2 and 3, however —the first called "Andante in C," and the second "Evening Song"—are well-considered little Pieces, melodious and carefully fingered (although we are not inclined to agree with some of the contractions); and as an escape from the "Instruction-book," with its interminable and generally uninteresting "lessons," we are inclined to believe that young players will accept them with gratitude.

WILLIAM CZERNY.

Menuetto and Scherzo from Schubert's Octett. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Eustace J. Breakspear.

GOOD music cannot be too extensively known; and as faithful transcriptions like those before us will bring the best concerted pieces into every drawing-room, they deserve a warm word of welcome. The arrangement is good in every respect; and no startling difficulties being attempted, even moderately advanced amateurs may feel assured that they will receive themselves, and present to their hearers, a very clear idea of the two movements in Schubert's beautiful Octett. The "Scherzo," especially, with its melodious "Trio," will be found a most effective piece.

Madoline. Allegretto Grazioso, for the Pianoforte, composed by J. Baptiste Calkin.

AN extremely characteristic and well-written trifle; the theme is melodious, and the simple manner in which it is treated throughout will make the piece highly attractive to those who do not believe that the aim of the pianist should be to accomplish successfully a number of executive feats. We cannot but think it a pity that so artistic and unpretentious a composition should be introduced by so eccentric a title-page. Why cannot the words be plainly and legibly printed, as they were in the days to which musicians still look back with pride?

LAMBORN COCK.

Gavotte for the Pianoforte.

Lonely. Song. Words from "All the Year round." Composed by E. H. Thorne.

MR. THORNE'S Gavotte has a ring of the olden time about it which is quite refreshing. The subject—quaintly stopping on the half bar—is extremely striking; and the character is well-preserved throughout, especially where the theme is taken, in the relative and tonic minor, with the left hand, against a flowing accompaniment of quavers. The song is a charming little vocal piece, which will require poetry both in the singer and accompanist to do it full justice. We particularly admire the manner in which the opening phrase is given out by the pianoforte, as if the vocalist were dreamily meditating on the keys.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—It is not without considerable regret and dissatisfaction that I read from time to time of the manner in which organists and choirmasters are chosen to fill important positions in (sometimes) large and populous parishes; and, as I have had the advantage of filling these posts for more than thirty years, and not being likely or desirous to offer myself as a candidate for any new appointment, and therefore cannot be considered as personally interested in the matter, I beg most respectfully to solicit a space in your columns for the airing of a grievance that might possibly lead to a profitable discussion on a difficult subject.

The duties of an ordinary parish organist are (as nearly as I can define them) as follows: three services on Sunday, and one (if not two) in the week; and one or (if he wishes to do his work well) two weekly practices of the full choir; in addition to which two extra practices of the boys, and of the (now useful adjunct) Sunday afternoon choir; besides which he has to look up and examine fresh members, both of men and boys; he has often to be humiliated by observations from well-meaning conscientious individuals, who possess just that little learning spoken of as "a dangerous thing," or, worse still, of those who confess that they know nothing about the technicalities of music, but who unfortunately take opinions on trust, not always from the best source; more than this, he has to study the taste of sentimental, operatic, and more particularly of rich members of the congregation.

An intelligent organist will meet these difficulties as best he can, but always with courtesy and respect, remembering that every member of the congregation has a right to express an opinion. All this, yes, and more than this, has to be borne, and performed, and struggled with in many cases for a stipend which, if proportionately divided, would range at about eighteenpence, two shillings, or two and sixpence a visit or service. This must be confessed to be but a shabby reward for the years of study, as well as for the superior tact and judgment required in such an office.

Referring, however, to the principal object of my letter, viz., to the difficult task of electing an organist, it cannot be denied that the plan of competition generally adopted often secures for the parish the worst of the whole batch of candidates. It is easy to see that a young man who is just fresh from his studies and practice, is likely to be more expert in mere manipulation than one who has been engaged in the numerous other duties of such a position. Occasionally it may answer, but only very occasionally, certainly not often, as many miserable failures can testify.

Therefore, it may be asked, What are we to do under the circumstances? What can we do better than place the matter in the hands of a good umpire, and allow him to decide for us? My answer to this is, if you want your organ played only, and do not care about the fitness for other duties appertaining to the office, you could not do better, but if you wish to combine with these the broader experience, influence, and good temper necessary to the office of choirmaster, then let me say most distinctly that the course pursued will, in nine cases out of ten, prove fatal to such a result. My advice is, when you have made your salary worthy of the office, to make your want known through the regular channel of advertisement, select a few of the promising candidates, then, instead of employing an umpire (however talented he might be) to judge by a temporary performance, which at the best is but an uncertain test of fitness, let a competent person be sent to judge of the work of the applicant at his own place—let him listen to his work as represented by his own choir, by his general accompaniment, and by the good taste brought to bear in the services, and let this be done without his being aware of it, so that a special service may not be prepared; private enquiries, too, may be made on the spot much more reliable than the usual number of written testimonials usually accompanying letters of application. Supposing a few pounds more are spent than by the present plan of proceedings, the result would be an enormous gain, and the parish would be almost certain to obtain a good choirmaster.

Next to this the College of Organists' degrees are perhaps the most useful, as the examinations have hitherto combined a practical as well as a theoretical and historical knowledge of the organ and its construction, with paper work on harmony and counterpoint. Although it is but fair to say many who might pass in all this might prove utterly unfit in other respects.

The university examinations, judging from the questions lately published, are good in many respects, but they are not sufficiently practical for working professors. If we want to build a house we select a good practical builder rather than the man who could inform us as to who invented the chimney pot; so the working musician is more to be depended on than one who can tell us who first used the dominant seventh or the added ninth, and exactly the date of birth and death of this or that great composer.

If a society could be formed numbering amongst its officers an inspector who would be expected to make himself acquainted with the home work of candidates before an election takes place, many bitter disappointments would be prevented and the services of our church would be placed in better hands, but as long as starvation stipends are dealt out with such a niggardly hand by rich congregations, good organists cannot be forthcoming simply because the money spent on their education will barely return the usual five per cent interest thereon.

I beg to remain, Sir,

Yours obediently,

T. E. SPINNEY.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ABERYSTWITH.—On the occasion of the opening of the new Catholic Church by his Eminence Cardinal Manning on Thursday, the 19th ult., the musical portion of the Services was under the direction of Mr. J. Batchelder, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Anne's, Junction Street, Manchester. Haydn's No. 3, was sung at "High Mass," the principal soloists being Miss Guinness, Mrs. Cooper, Miss Daniel, Miss Tervin (St. John's Cathedral, Salford), Mr. John Hughes (Hallé's Concerts), Mr. T. Allen (Church of the Holy Name, Manchester), Mr. W. Roberts, and Mr. John Nuttall. The "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's Messiah was sung at the conclusion of the Service. In the evening the following pieces were sung, Laudate, (Zingarelli), Salve Regina, (Novello), Litany, (Swaby), O Salutaris, (Gounod), Tantum Ergo, (Batchelder), and Date Sonitum (Costa).

ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA.—The prospectus of the Adelaide Amateur Musical Union for 1875-6 announces that during the season the following works, or selections from them, will be produced: Beethoven's "Choral Symphony" and "Fidelio;" Mozart's "Jupiter Symphony;" Spohr's "Calvary;" Weber's "Euryanthe;" Verdi's "Requiem Mass;" Wagner's "Rienzi" and "Lohengrin;" Randegger's "Fridolin;" Benedict's "Undine;" Balfe's "Enchantress;" Schumann's "Pilgrimage of the Rose;" Gabriel's "Evangeline," &c. As it is also intimated that the usual part-songs and glees will be continued, and the best instrumental music obtainable in Adelaide form a feature in the programmes, it will be sufficiently shown that everything has been done by the committee to secure the patronage and support of the public.

BUXTON.—A special concert was given on Thursday evening the 12th ult., which was largely attended. Mr. Sims Reeves in Mendelssohn's sacred song "If with all your hearts," the ballad "Once Again," and "Tom Bowling," created an extraordinary success; and Madame Cave-Ashton, who sang "Scenes that are brightest," "My mother bids me bind my hair," and "Robin Adair," was warmly received, the latter song being encored. Mr. Julian Adams played in his usual brilliant manner Moscheles's "Recollections of Ireland," and Hummel's "Andante con Variazioni," from the celebrated Septuor. Several instrumental pieces were also most effectively rendered by the orchestra, under the skilful conductorship of Mr. Julian Adams.

CHELMSFORD.—A concert of vocal and instrumental music was given at the Institute on Monday evening, the 16th ult., by the brothers Lovini, assisted by Miss Westmacott and other artists. The programme consisted of songs, part-songs, instrumental solos, &c., all of which were well received. Miss Westmacott was very successful in the song "She wore a wreath of roses," as was also Mr. Lovini in "Come into the garden, Maud," and "The Vagabond." Haydn's trio in G, for violin, pianoforte, and violoncello was also included in the programme.

HASTINGS.—The concerts at the Pier Pavilion have been highly popular and crowded to excess each evening during the last fortnight. The orchestra, which includes some very good soloists, under the experienced direction of Mr. C. H. R. Marriott is extremely effective; the vocalists have been Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Marie Duval, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Stedman, the latter gentleman having introduced Arthur Sullivan's new song "The love that loves me not." Another novelty, "Fair Ellen of the Mill," from the pen of Mr. Marriott, has been well received.

HATCHAM.—The dedication festival of S. James's Church took place on Sunday, the 25th July, S. James's Day, and was observed with unprecedentedly elaborate Services. The Holy Eucharist was thrice offered, the celebration being fully choral. The Processional was Hymn 82 ("Hymnal Noted"), and the Introit "How dear are Thy counsels." Schubert's Kyrie, Credo, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Gloria in Excelsis were sung, the offertory being "Glorious king of martyrs," and the "Hallelujah" chorus. Gounod's "O salutaris" followed the Agnus Dei, the antiphon being "Wisdom hath builded." The service was rendered by a surpliced choir of fifty men and boys, and a band of twenty-two performers. The vicar of S. James's, Rev. Arthur Tooth, M.A., celebrated. At Evensong the church was again crowded to excess. The Rev. R. Linklater, of S. Peter's, London Docks, preached the sermon. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to a service in A, composed by Mr. Jacob Bradford, Mus. Bac., Oxon, the musical director of the festival, and special orchestral accompaniments were also written by him for the occasion. His anthem "I was glad" took the place of the office hymn, and after the sermon "Faith of our fathers" and the Hallelujah chorus were sung. Mr. Bradford and Mr. Wareham deserve great credit for the able discharge of their respective duties as director and organist. The choir and band worked well together. The orchestra was efficiently led by Mr. Pawle, and Mr. King had charge of the choir arrangements. The soloists were Messrs. Palmer, Loveday, Gardner, and Hewitt, and Master Belle.

LINDSAY, ONTARIO, CANADA.—The quarterly meeting of the clergy of the Deanery was held at St. Paul's Church on Wednesday, the 28th July. Rural Dean Allen preached the sermon. The following music was sung: Psalms 136th, 137th, 138th; Gregorian Chants from Mercer; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Ebdon in C; Anthem, "Thou, O God," Turner; Hymns, 64th and 14th, Ancient and Modern, "As with gladness" and "Abide with me;" Tunes, "Dix" and "Eventide."

LLANARTH.—The Eisteddfod, held in this picturesque village on the 29th July, under the presidency of Mr. Stephen Evans, of London, was a decided success. Mr. Brinley Richards adjudged the prizes for music, the competitions for which were highly interesting; and an evening concert was given, the solo vocalists being Misses Lizzie Evans, A. Williams, H. Davies, Messrs. Sauvage, and R. C. Jenkins. The conductor was Mynyddog, and the pianist Mr. Brinley Richards.

OTLEY.—The ninth annual festival of the Choral Union was celebrated in the Parish Church, on Saturday afternoon, the 31st of July. The choirs of the neighbouring townships, forming the Union, mustered in strong force. The service was intoned by the Rev. J. A. Seaton, of Cleckheaton, and the responses throughout were excellently sung. The anthem was founded on the first three verses of the hundred and fifth Psalm, the music by Sir George Elvey. In this—as also in the Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis, and hymns—the four separate parts were capitally sustained. Mr. A. Longfield presided at the organ, and Mr. W. Stables, Organist of Kirkstall, conducted. A collection was made at the close of the sermon, and the sum realised amounted to £13. The benediction was pronounced by the Vicar, the Rev. S. R. Anderson, after which the choir sung, as a recessional, the hymn commencing "Sing ye faithful, sing with gladness," which concluded a most successful festival.

POOLE.—On Tuesday, the 3rd ult., the organ of St. James's Church, which has been reconstructed, modernised, and enlarged by Messrs. Walker and Sons, London, at a cost of about £800, was opened, there being service morning and evening on the occasion. Mr. J. Whitehead Smith, R.A.M., organist of Wimborne Minster, most ably presided at the instrument, which is vastly improved both in power and tone, and is supplied with those modern requisites in which it was formerly deficient. The choir of the Minster was also in attendance. A suitable voluntary having been played on the organ by Mr. Whitehead Smith, the first portion of the prayers was read by the Rev. L. D. Damer. The Service used was that by Dr. Dykes. The proper Psalms were the 144th, 145th, and 146th. Both the Te Deum and the Jubilate Deo were excellently sung, and in the former the solos were especially well taken. In all respects there was evidenced the result of careful training.

RIPLEY, near DERBY.—A most successful Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, on Monday evening the 23rd ult., by Mr. R. F. Coules, F.C.O., organist to the Rev. the Earl of Mulgrave, at Worsley. The recital, which was preceded by a short, hearty Evensong, was listened to with the utmost attention by a numerous congregation.

Mr. Coules was assisted in the recital by Master Albert Mellor of Eton College Chapel, who sang several solos from the Messiah.

SHANKLIN (ISLE OF WIGHT).—On the 20th ult., Dr. Sloman gave an Organ Recital at St. Saviour's, on the beautiful instrument lately erected by Messrs. Walker. The programme was selected from the works of ancient and modern writers, and included a selection from Dr. Sloman's new Cantata Supplication and Praise.

SIDMOUTH.—On Friday evening the 6th ult., an amateur concert was given in the London Hotel Assembly Room, under the conductorship of Mr. H. A. Harding, F.C.O., in aid of the funds of the Sidmouth Needlework Society. The first part of the programme consisted of sacred music, commencing with Handel's "Occasional" overture, which was played in such a manner as would have reflected credit on a professional band. Miss Godolphin Osborne presided at the harmonium; and Mrs. Hine Haycock and Miss King at the piano. All the choruses and part-songs were rendered with great care and marked precision, reflecting the greatest credit on the Conductor.

SOUTHSEA.—A Pianoforte Recital was given at the Portland Hall, on the 18th ult., by Mr. G. S. Löhr, on which occasion he was assisted by Mr. C. E. M'Cheane, Mr. H. B. Bethune, and Mr. R. H. Löhr, the band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry (under the direction of Herr Kreyer), and a company of gentlemen styling themselves the Minne Singers. Mr. Löhr performed several classical pianoforte compositions, including Beethoven's Concerto in E flat, Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor, Chopin's Study in C sharp minor and Valse in A flat; and, in conjunction with Mr. R. H. Löhr, a selection from Brahms's Hungarian Dances. A feature in the programme was a Concert Overture in E composed by the concert-giver and well played by the Band. Two songs written by Mr. Löhr, "When twilight dews," sung by Mr. M'Cheane, and "Now," sung by Mr. Bethune, were well received, as were also the pieces contributed by the Minne Singers.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—The Tettenhall Wood Congregational Church special Services in connection with the opening of the Organ, recently erected, were held on Sunday, the 8th ult., the preacher morning and evening being the pastor, the Rev. J. P. Driver. At the Morning Service the Sanctus was sung to Kocher's music, and the psalms to chants by Allcock and Blow. The hymns were Nos. 229, 261, and 256, and the anthems "O praise God in His holiness," (Weldon), and "I will lift up mine eyes" (Dr. Clarke). At the Evening Service the Sanctus was sung to an arrangement from Bach, and the psalms to Norris's chant. The hymns were Nos. 256, 773, and 944, the anthems being the same as at the Morning Service. The choir of the Church was assisted by members of other choirs in the town, the total number of voices being 34. The organ consists of 2 manuals and pedals, and contains 17 stops, arranged as follows: great organ, open diapason, stopped diapason (treble), ditto (bass), viol de gamba, flute, principal, twelfth, fifteenth, sesquialtra, swell organ, open diapason, stopped diapason, principal, trumpet, bourdon, pedals, bourdon, couplers, great to pedals, swell to great. There are also three composition pedals. The collections amounted to over £30.

WOULD YOU GAIN A MAIDEN'S HEART. Madrigal. By ROBERT SLOMAN, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

"To write a good madrigal is no easy task. In addition to genius and feeling, it demands a large amount of musical scholarship; and so perfect are the models of this class of composition—the Italian and English madrigals of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the Augustan age of pure vocal harmony—that the production of a madrigal like those of Marenzio or Wilbye, has been said to be as arduous as an attempt to rival a statue of Praxiteles or Phidias. . . . Dr. Sloman's music has a relish of the olden time. The separate parts are exceedingly melodious, and the effect produced by their combination is full and rich, while there is not a speck upon the transparent clearness of the harmony. Altogether this is a charming madrigal, and does honour to its author."—The Press and St. James's Chronicle.

"At the present time there are many families who have musical meetings at home once or twice during the month, and to these we recommend this charming madrigal."—The Ladies' Treasury.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

49, Broad-street, Oxford, May 13, 1875.

Sir,—I herewith enclose a cheque for the Pedals and Action, duly received. I must say that I am very much pleased with them. I have easily fixed the Pedals with the aid of your printed instructions. Return receipt and oblige—Yours respectfully,

To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol. F. W. J. CHAUNDY.

4, Rose Cottages, South Norwood Hill, London, May 24, 1875.

Sir,—I enclose a P.O. Order for the Pedals and Action, and am exceedingly pleased with the easy and ingenious manner of attaching the Pedals to the Pianoforte Keys. It all works well.

Yours truly,

JESSE MINNS, F.C.O.,

Member of the Council of the College of Organists.

To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol.

These letters are similar to a great many others which have been received.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. Hattersley & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

CARL MARIA VON WEBER.

BY F. WEBER.

WHEN glancing over the many portraits of tone-poets with which modern photographic art has graced our drawing-room tables, and whose life and artistic creations have become equally familiar to us, we dwell with peculiar fascination upon the features, delicate and thoughtful, yet highly intellectual, of Carl Maria von Weber. We begin to ponder over the career of the great composer with feelings on the whole of sadness, presenting as it does the picture of a vigorous and enthusiastic, but extremely sensitive, artistic nature gradually being chilled, at least to outward appearances, by the wear and tear of professional struggles and disappointments. We think of him, the youth (presenting all the forced appearance of a hot-house plant) who at the age of thirteen could already boast the authorship, and not unsuccessful performance in public, of a "grand romantic Opera." We follow the young musician in his noble and successful efforts to shake off, by virtue of the innate vigour of his individuality, the mischievous effects of a mistaken education inflicted upon him on the part of a fond, but also vain and unscrupulous father. Unfolding anon the brilliant demonstrative qualities of his versatile genius, we find the wandering virtuoso embracing life with all the glowing energy and large sympathies of the true artist, tasting fitfully alike the sweet and the bitter cup, and gathering the while the leaves to that sketchbook from which he should draw his masterpieces. But ere long the seriousness of life gains the upper hand, and as the hitherto undefined forms of his artistic ideal begin to shape themselves clearer and clearer before his eyes, his soul is filled with that more intense, if calmer fire, from whence the inspired work of art is derived. Then follow the years of yoke in an official capacity—the years of incessant strife with petty intrigues directed against his noble efforts to create a home for the musical drama at Dresden worthy of his country and of his own daily growing fame. And already the approaching fatal illness casts its gloomy shadows upon his path in gradually shortening intervals. Then, as the end draws near, we see the master, the laurels of Freischütz and Euryanthe yet fresh upon his pale forehead, but himself sick even unto death, tearing himself away from all that is dearest to him upon earth. Animated only by the one great desire to increase amply, as he hoped, the means of subsistence of those whom he knew he should soon have to leave to struggle on for themselves, he arrives in England. One more disappointment, the bitterest of all, and the scene closes amidst unspeakable sadness. Far away from the home to which he was so passionately attached, his hopes of material success crushed, his heart broken, the master lays down his weary head and dies. Sad indeed! Melancholy the thought that the latter days of the great man—when his genius had attained its full development, when his inspired song had filled his native country from one end to the other until it burst its boundaries, carrying his fame far and wide—should also have been days of harassing toil, of increasing anxiety to provide for his family, of protracted bodily suffering ending in premature death. Surely it is but natural if, with these impressions on our mind, a glance at the portrait of Carl Maria von Weber, as we single it out from among those of other great composers, should raise in us, for a moment, the thought that he was born to be a martyr to his art.

Yet nothing could be farther from the truth. And even now, while thus contemplating the melancholy aspects of his career, we seem to hear, as if in protest against the narrow view we are taking of the artist's life, the joyous, nay, exultant strains representing the leading idea—the idea of purest love and devotion pervading his three great operas; strains which he has placed in the very centre of his overtures, and which are so emphatically associated in our minds with Weber. Nor is it only in his operatic music that this gladsome spirit manifests itself. Be it in his chamber music, his pianoforte pieces, or his simple songs, wherever we point to a particular passage as being peculiarly characteristic of Weber, we may be sure the passage is one expressive of joy—of that elevating joy which lifts us at once from the prosaic cares of daily life into a purer sphere of existence. And this joyous enthusiasm never forsakes him to the last. Witness his latest work, Oberon. Remember the thrilling notes of the overture; a work familiar to everyone, even though the Opera to which it forms the prologue has all but disappeared from the répertoire of our operatic establishments. Above the tumultuous waves of contending tone-masses rises higher and higher, with increasing confidence, the theme suggestive of the heroic love of a noble woman, bursting forth at last with triumphant exultation:

"My Huon, my husband, we're saved, we're saved!"

Who can detect the trembling hand of the suffering master in these strains? Yet they had been wrung from his genius while death was impatiently knocking at the door. And here, if anywhere in the career of a great composer, the truth is proclaimed—that true art and true religion are twin-sisters, dependent for their inspirations upon the same divine source from which they sprang. This spirited orchestral work, indeed, worthily represents our composer's "last thoughts;" and it is a matter of wonder to us that the pretty, but eminently drawing-room-scented piece of Reissiger's, bearing that title, sometimes more charitably converted into "Weber's Last Waltz," should up to this day, in spite of periodical contradiction, pass with the general public for the final inspiration of the pen which had just written Oberon, a work which, if somewhat fragmentary, is nevertheless full of poetic life, of youthful fire and enthusiasm. Besides this joyous spirit which we have traced in Weber's compositions, two apparently antagonistic elements are happily blended in our composer's artistic nature—the aristocratic and the democratic. The former makes itself known in the air of refinement and cultivation of an elegant grace—"chevaleresqueness" as a German critic aptly calls it—which pervades his music throughout, not unfrequently lending to even a trivial thought a charm and an importance it does not otherwise possess. The latter consists in his persistent and generous appeal to the hearts of the people, in whose genius he believed, and whom he strove to raise to a higher appreciation of that art to whose service his life was devoted. It was, however, only in the latter period of his career, when he was ripening into mastership, that he clearly perceived the democratic mission he had. The restless fire within him, which shaped his course in his earlier days, led him to seek new forms and modes of musical expression among all manner of nationalities in quaint rhythms and modulations. Thus we have his Polaccas and Ecossaises, his Sicilianas and Rondos Ongareses, and even an Overtura Chineza. These, however, were but studies of costume, admirably adapted indeed in the masterly music he wrote to the melodrama Preciosa—not by any means an "Opera," as we have repeatedly seen it styled—and to some extent in Oberon. Ere long his attention was attracted nearer home, and became at last concentrated upon that mine of wealth for poet as well as for musician—the German Volkslied. It was from thence he should derive his finest inspirations, and it is by no means a mere coincidence that the period of some four years, over which the composition of Der Freischütz extends, should also be marked by a number of Weber's most charming songs, all leaning more or less to the simplicity of the Volkslied. Freischütz came, a work conceived in the very spirit of the "song of the people" itself, and created an enthusiasm, an almost frantic excitement in all ranks of German society, of which it is impossible in this more critical and eminently business-like age to form an adequate idea. But although the excitement with regard to this, Weber's first great opera, has long since made room for calmer emotions, the popular voice still claims this evergreen work as peculiarly its own, while Euryanthe, undoubtedly his masterpiece, in which his powers appear exhibited to their fullest extent, in which all his artistic aims are concentrated, has failed to this day to win for itself that high place in popular estimation it so richly deserves.

These three elements, then, viz., the refined gracefulness, the spirit of popularity and withal the joyous enthusiasm, as they are among the chief characteristics of Weber's music, so they are equally illustrative of the whole character of the man. And if—as has been maintained—among the many new phases of modern musical development to which his genius has given the first impulse, he is also the originator of what is called "Programme Music;" so we may, in a wider sense, consider his whole life, a life of the highest and noblest aspirations, to form the great "Programme" or commentary to his artistic creations; the study of the former being indispensable to the perfect appreciation of the latter. If this would seem to be applicable more or less to the works of any other great artist, it is the case, at all events, to an exceptional degree with those of Weber. Indeed, in this all but inseparable connection between the artist and the individual may be partially traced the reason why he, who in almost every department of his art produced works full of creative power, yet attained in but few of them that finish, that harmony of the parts which make them rank as classical. Whereas the great masters of the classical period, at the end of which Weber was placed, the period marked by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, stood, at least when at the height of their imaginative powers above their creations, Weber always stands in the midst of his own, throwing into them the full weight of his individual experiences in joy and sorrow. Thus upon all his truly original compositions he impressed the stamp and seal only of his fresh and vigorous individuality, with which they must either stand or fall, and at the end of each manuscript he inscribed the words, "Wie Gott will;" obedient rather to the voice within him, than to the dictates of the "school." His genius lacked the steady, symmetrical development, which characterises the career of the classical masters above referred to. But that which, from one point of view, must be considered his weakness, was in truth Weber's great strength. Surrounded as he was by a swarm of mere imitators of the style of Mozart on the one hand, and of infatuated followers of the dolce far niente creed of Rossini on the other, this distinct and most marked individuality makes him stand out in bold relief from his contemporaries, and could not fail to exercise the most enlivening and refreshing influence upon the art of his time. Although some twenty-five years in the grave, it was only in the second decade of the present century that the stupendous genius of Mozart came to be universally acknowledged, and produced a type of more or less talented musicians, to whom there was but one true art and Mozart was its sole exponent. The result was a legion of compositions, operatic and otherwise, all bearing such a strong family likeness, that it would puzzle the most learned musical antiquarian of our days to detect any distinct individuality in the majority of them. Rossini, on his part, had leapt into European fame at a bound, and the sweet, effervescent melodies of the "Swan of Pesaro" had made sad havoc among the "nation of thinkers," who—turning a deaf ear to the grave warnings from the partakers in the Mozartian infallibility—abandoned itself for a time, like the rest of the world, to their intoxicating influence. Midway between these two extreme parties stands Weber, whose reverence for Mozart amounted almost to religious veneration, and whose dislike for anything connected, however remotely, with Rossini—the Rossini as he knew him, not in the latter phase, manifested in Tell, which Weber never witnessed—might appear exaggerated, but for his profound belief in the sacredness of his art, and an inner consciousness of being, in part, responsible to the German people for the inheritance of a great past. But he was not a blind worshipper of Mozart, neither did his keen eye entirely overlook the merits of the volatile Italian maëstro's numerous operas. He thoroughly understood his time. With a mind enlarged by self-culture, with a critical faculty developed to a degree hitherto unknown among practical musicians, he felt himself en rapport with all the artistic strivings of the period, and clearer than any composer had ever done before him, he recognized the intimate relationship and inter-communication which ought to exist between poetry and music. He made a stand against Rossiniism and the Italian party in general, which was then still all powerful at the more important German courts where opera was cultivated, and the first performances both of his Freischütz and his Euryanthe presented, in the tumultuous demonstration of party spirit, more the appearance of pitched battles, than of representations of productions belonging to a peaceful art, intended for recreation and edification. Everyone understood, that with these works Weber indirectly aimed at the due recognition and firm establishment in his country of the national German opera, i.e., of an Art-Work—to use a Teutonic term of modern adoption—conceived, poetically and musically, in the German spirit. Hence, at the very outset, he found arrayed against him in powerful league a number of Italian composers of undoubted talent, occupying the most influential positions at Imperial and Royal operatic establishments in Germany, who, in the instinct of self-preservation, had for years systematically kept down the native production. Those who are acquainted with the life of Mozart, know the malicious envy, emanating from that quarter, which was so busily at work in order to suppress the growing fame of his genius. Still

Italian opera, no matter what its merits, remained the plaything of fashion, and thus the guidanceship of the taste of the people was entrusted to men who—like Salieri in Vienna, Morlacchi in Dresden, Spontini in Berlin—during a long residence in their adopted country, had not even thought it necessary to acquire so much as the elementary part of its language.

We shall feel much indebted to those who send works for review if they will abandon the practice of enclosing a letter saying that they are old subscribers to the Musical Times, or requesting that, in the event of a notice appearing, half-a-dozen copies of the journal may be forwarded to a certain address. We of course have every respect for an "old subscriber;" but when he becomes a composer, and requests a review upon one of his productions, he addresses us as a stranger, and takes his place accordingly. It need scarcely be said, too, that half-a-dozen copies of the Musical Times can be had at any time, on application; and it is not likely, therefore, that the editor will keep a list of those who wish this number to be posted to them "should a notice appear." Plainly speaking, then, we consider all such private and confidential communications as bribes; and although they cannot influence us in judging of the music sent, they may in judging of the senders. Should we be compelled to review a composition unfavourably, we do not wish to think ill of the worker as well as the work, and if we give it a laudatory notice, we like to hope that its author is not only a good composer, but an honest man.

Everybody knows that it is the custom in advertising apartments, to name the special advantages which will be enjoyed by the fortunate person who engages them. They are near a railway station, for instance, remarkable for salubrity of air, and omnibuses pass the door every quarter of an hour. But in glancing at a paper the other morning, we were informed that one of these bachelors' residences possessed the double attraction of "croquet and piano." Whether the instrument is placed on the lawn to accompany the players is not stated; but if so, we can imagine that there is a new field for composers: "croquet music" must have an individual character; for being always played in the open air, it should be full of light and shade; and although pleasing enough to enliven the scene, must not draw off the attention from the abstrusities of the game. We can imagine, too, that pianofortes impervious to rain will be manufactured for these occasions; and as there can be no doubt that performers will be engaged to play at croquet matches, the thanks of the public are due to the enterprising advertiser of the apartments we have mentioned for opening up an entirely novel branch of industry and talent.

No stronger proof of the fact of high-class concerts having been gradually brought within the reach of all music lovers could be adduced than the sentence in the Prospectus of the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts, just issued, that "owing to the great increase which has taken place in the expense of the Winter Concerts during the past few years, the Directors beg to inform the subscribers that they are under the necessity of raising the price of stalls for the series (twenty-six concerts) from Two Guineas to Two Guineas and a half." The idea of apologising for charging Two Guineas and a half for twenty-six concerts, the quality of which may be seen by the list of works to be performed, printed in another part of our present number, appears strange indeed to persons who remember those exclusive institutions, the Philharmonic Society and Ancient Concerts, the former of which, however, has lived to recognise the democratic spirit of the age. Music is too humanising an agent to be allowed only a limited range for the exercise of its influence; and in spreading a knowledge of its power among the people, the excellent Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace have done good service. Mr. Manns is now thoroughly master of the situation; and so highly are his performances appreciated, that we believe if the original terms for seats were doubled, scarcely a subscriber would be missed from the list.

Now that the time for holding the Triennial Festival at Worcester has passed away, it would be useless for musical journals to do more, as far as that city is concerned, than express regret at the mistake that has been committed; but for the sake of the meetings that are to come at Hereford and Gloucester, we would wish to draw attention to a pamphlet recently published at the office of the Hereford Times, entitled "The Mock Festival of the Three Choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford; or the Festival of the Five Priests. By a Layman." In this tract there is much plain speaking, and some good solid argument, especially in reply to what Canon Barry terms the "principles" which have given rise to the abolition of the old Festivals. We cannot extract from this somewhat lengthy stricture upon the extraordinary conduct of those who have unfortunately the custody of the Cathedral; but quite agree with the writer that, after excluding first-class artists, both vocal and instrumental, from the Festival, sweeping away all Oratorios, and substituting for the orchestral accompaniment an organ, there is a simplicity positively sublime in the sentence issued by the authors of all this mischief, that "They hope these arrangements will prove satisfactory."

Earl Granville has again presided at a meeting for the promotion of the National Training School for Music. Sandwich, where the appeal was this time made, is not a particularly lively place; and this fact the chairman endeavoured to impress upon his audience. He said that he found grass growing in the streets, but he was pleased to state that "there was none in the market-place, none in their counting-houses, and that although the sea had receded from the town, it was still well known for its excellent ship-building." This is rather good, but we do not exactly see what it has to do with the object of the meeting. But he did once speak of music, and declared that it was "a fitting occupation for the leisure hours of either busy or idle men." Here, then, is hope for the pupils of the National Training School; for supposing that his Lordship's ideas upon the art should pervade the aristocracy generally, they may expect to be engaged by noblemen, as court-jesters were in former times, to amuse their patrons when they would fain be removed from serious thought.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We have already expressed our opinion upon the absence of any novelty in the scheme for this Triennial Festival, and have now only to chronicle the performance of works so thoroughly well known as to render details unnecessary. Under the direction of Sir Julius Benedict (who has been the Conductor of the last ten Festivals in this city), Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given on Monday evening, the 20th ult.; the principal singers being Madame Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd and Signor Foli; Miss D'Alton giving with good effect the trying music of Jezebel, and Madame Enequist, Messrs. Minns, Guy, Smith, and Wadmore assisting in the more subordinate parts. The choruses were on the whole well rendered, but the want of efficient rehearsal was occasionally too obvious to escape notice. The concert on the following evening had better have been confined to vocal selections entirely, for these were what the audience came to hear, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony, although finely rendered, was, of course, received somewhat coldly, with the exception of the Finale, the jubilant nature of which elicited some applause. Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Serenade" and "Triumphal March," from "Joan of Arc," and Sir G. Elvey's "Festal March" scarcely served to enhance the value of the programme in an artistic sense. Of course, Mdlle. De Belocca, Mdlle. Albani, Mdlle. Enequist, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd and Signor Foli were received with expressions of frantic delight, and, financially, we can scarcely doubt that the concert was a great success. The first morning performance took place on Wednesday, when Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" (Hymn of Praise), Cherubini's "Ave Maria," for soprano solo, with orchestra and clarionet obbligato, a selection from Henry Hugh Pierson's Oratorio, "Jerusalem," and Haydn's third (or Imperial) Mass were given. Mdlle. Albani created a genuine effect in the soprano part of Mendelssohn's work, and Mdlle. Enequist and Mr. Lloyd were also most successful in the music allotted to them. Cherubini's piece was given with such exquisite expression by Mdlle. De Belocca (Mr. Lazarus playing the obbligato clarionet part in his usual finished style), that the Mayor kindly commanded an encore, a condescension for which the audience seemed profoundly grateful. Norwich has always patronised Mr. Pierson, and we were not surprised to hear portions of one of his Oratorios during the Festival; but his music does not grow upon us, and once in three years, therefore, we find quite enough to listen to his strains. Madame Sherrington, Mdlle. Enequist, Mr. Guy, and Mr. Lloyd did their very best with the solos, but the effect was so dreary that Haydn's Imperial Mass came as a most welcome relief; the solo parts being excellently rendered by Mdlle. Enequist, Madame Patey, Mr. Guy and Mr. Wadmore, the last-named gentleman in the "Qui tollis" thoroughly proving his fitness for the responsible position assigned to him at this Festival. At the evening concert Dr. Macfarren's "Festival Overture" was well played and cordially received, and then came Sir Julius Benedict's Cantata, "The Legend of St. Cecilia," the principal parts being sustained by Mdlle. Albani, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Signor Foli. This beautiful dramatic work, produced at the Norwich Festival of 1866, was fully commented upon by us at the time, and we have now only to say that its success on the present occasion must have been highly gratifying to the composer. All the solos were most effectively rendered, Mdlle. Albani especially creating a marked impression in the Finale; and the concerted music also proving that the vocalists had thrown their best energies into the task before them. Two movements from Sir J. Benedict's Symphony in F opened the second part of the concert, the "Andante," heard for the first time, being in every respect worthy of its companion movements and of the composer's reputation; melodious throughout, clear in construction, and admirably instrumented, it thoroughly made its way even with the somewhat impassive listeners, and elicited warm applause. A selection from an Operetta called "The Science of Love," by Mr. J. A. Harcourt, was also given, and received with favour; it is difficult, however, to judge of a work in the concert-room especially intended for the stage. The rest of the performance was made up of vocal pieces by the favourite vocalists. Spohr's fine Hymn, "God, Thou art great," commenced the morning performance on Thursday, Mdlle. Enequist, Madame Patey, and Mr. Minns singing the principal solos. The work was exellently rendered. Nothing need be said of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," which followed, nor indeed of Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," save that the latter work seemed to create a deep impression; and that, though Mdlle. Enequist scarcely satisfied us in the soprano solos, Mdme. Patey was absolutely perfect in the recitatives which fell to her share, and also in the beautiful air, "Lord, Thou hast searched me out." We must also say that Mdlle. Albani, during the morning, sang Handel's "Let the bright seraphim" (with Mr. T. Harper's trumpet obbligato) so finely as to receive an encore. The performance of Signor Randegger's Cantata, "Fridolin" (directed by the composer), was the feature of the evening concert, the excessive beauty of the music and the picturesqueness of the orchestration securing for it a triumphant success. Mdme. Sherrington, Mr. Lloyd, Signor Foli, and Mr. Wadmore sang the principal parts with excellent effect throughout, and at the conclusion of the Cantata Signor Randegger was warmly greeted. A Festival Overture of much merit, by Mr. W. T. Best, was also included in the programme. The usual performance of the "Messiah," on Friday, followed by a ball in the evening, concluded a Festival which, in a musical point of view, can only be said to have had a local interest. We regret to find that, after the expenses are deducted, there will be but a small sum for distribution amongst the Charities in the neighbourhood.

THE DEAN AND CHAPTER'S FESTIVAL AT WORCESTER.

In place of the "Festival of the Three Choirs," we have this year had a series of services at Worcester Cathedral, the most appropriate title for which is that we have substituted for the heading which has for so many years appeared in these columns. The meeting commenced on Tuesday, the 21st ult., with an early full choral service in the choir, Ouseley's "Blessed be Thou" being given; a second service taking place in the afternoon. On Wednesday morning, at the early service, Mr. Townshend Smith's Anthem, "O how amiable," was sung, accompanied by the composer; at half-past eleven o'clock, "O clap your hands," (Gibbons) and Mendelssohn's Cantata, "Not unto us"; in the afternoon, S. S. Wesley's Anthem, "Let us lift up," and Spohr's Cantata, "God, Thou art great." On Thursday, in the morning, S. S. Wesley's Anthem, "The Wilderness," and Handel's Anthem, "O praise the Lord"; in the afternoon, Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Spohr's "How lovely are Thy dwellings." On Wednesday morning, the Venite and Psalms were chanted, the Te Deum and Jubilate being from Wesley's Service in E; and in the afternoon, the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were Walmisley's in B flat. Contrary to the expressed intention, Mr. Lewis Thomas was engaged, and sang the bass air, "The Lord shall increase you," so finely as to give some character to a Festival from which it was feared all the attraction had been carefully blotted out. Dr. Wesley presided with his usual skill at the organ. A private subscription having been for some time progressing, we believe that the Charity will not suffer by the new scheme; but the feeling in the city has been unmistakably shown by many of the residents, not always perhaps in the best taste.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Those who have followed the career of Mr. Carl Rosa since he assumed the responsibility of producing opera in English at a time when no native manager had the courage to attempt such a task, must have been thoroughly convinced that his first effort to establish himself in the metropolis would, whether successful or not, be one in every respect worthy of a reputation legitimately earned both in the United States and in the provinces of England. But there were few, even of the most sanguine enthusiasts in his cause, who were not completely taken by surprise at the perfection with which the English version of "Le Nozze di Figaro" was produced on the opening night, the 11th ult. True he had Mr. Santley for Figaro, and Miss Rose Hersee for Susanna, Mdlle. Torriani (who has already created a certain name at Her Majesty's Opera) for the Countess, a clever débutante, Miss Josephine Yorke, for Cherubino, and Mr. Campobello for the Count; but even such efficient representatives of the principal characters as these would not have secured so triumphant a result had not the orchestra been composed of the very best artists, the chorus been judiciously selected, and the opera rehearsed with a care which shows how thoroughly the lessee has thrown his heart into the enterprise. Of the singing of Mr. Santley we cannot speak too highly; not only was the popular "Non piu andrai," so well given as to elicit an encore, which could not be resisted—his other important solos receiving an equally finished rendering—but his share in the concerted music gave a strength to the ensemble which materially added to the success of the opera. Mdlle. Torriani's pronunciation of the English language was, as might be expected, somewhat defective; but she sang carefully, especially in "Dove sono," and gradually won the good opinion of the audience. Miss Hersee made a most effective Susanna, singing extremely well in the expressive parts; and Miss Josephine Yorke gained a richly merited encore in "Voi che sapete," although she has much to learn both as a vocalist and actress, before she can take the highest rank on the operatic stage. Mr. Campobello has a good voice, and uses it well; we should be glad, however, to see him abandon himself more to the part, and get rid of a certain self-consciousness which occasionally mars his efforts. Mr. Charles Lyall was an excellent Basilio; and if Mr. Aynsley Cook as Dr. Bartolo, and Mrs. Aynsley Cook as Marcellina, sometimes forgot that they were not acting in a burlesque, they can at least plead as an excuse that there were many who laughed at and applauded them. At the conclusion of the opera Mr. Rosa was called upon the stage, and received the congratulations of an audience filling every part of the theatre.

Gounod's opera, "Faust," introduced a singer unknown here, Mr. F. C. Packard, in the character of the hero; and although, perhaps, the attempt was somewhat too ambitious, there can be no doubt that the new-comer will be welcome, especially if Mr. Rosa's venture should be sufficiently successful to lead to the establishment of English Opera, supported by a company of native vocalists. Faust is a trying part, and Mr. Packard had to struggle against comparisons; but he sang well, and happily without the tremolo to which we have been so long accustomed at the Italian Opera. His "Salve dimora" was a genuine specimen of vocalisation, and elicited warm and well-deserved applause. Mdlle. Torriani was an effective Marguerite, the "Jewel Song," especially, being given with much brilliancy, and a great portion of the scene in the garden also deserves most favourable mention. Miss Lucy Franklein was efficient in the part of Siebel; Mr. F. H. Celli gave the music of Mephistopheles effectively, if with occasional exaggeration; Mr. Campobello thoroughly satisfied us in Valentine; and Mrs. Aynsley Cook and Mr. Ludwig in the subordinate parts of Martha and Wagner, left nothing to desire. The choristers—quite a feature at this establishment—gave every piece falling to their share with excellent effect, gaining a solid encore for the "Soldier's chorus."

If Signor Cagnoni's feeble opera, "The Porter of Havre," were produced for the purpose of proving that Mr. Santley is a much better actor than we imagined him to be, the experiment was perfectly successful. In the part of Martin he gave us so finished a study of the alternate humour and pathos evolved by the varied situations of the drama, that he would have taken high rank as the possessor of exceptional histrionic powers, had he not uttered a note. But the libretto (founded upon the well-known "Porter's Knot"), although well adapted from the Italian by Mr. John Oxenford, is not fitted for a musical setting; and, Signor Cagnoni, though by no means a worse composer than many whose works we are unfortunately compelled to pass judgment upon, has no claim to be dragged forward from the obscurity into which he has retired since the performance of his still weaker opera, "Don Bucefalo." There can be little need to dwell on the music; for, in spite of the applause gained by one of the most perfect first-night performances we have ever witnessed, we cannot believe that the work will be heard after the termination of Mr. Rosa's season. We may say, however, that the duet between the money-lender and Martin in the cottage, and the whole of the finale to the second act, seem to show that, had the composer been less an imitator of the vapid Italian school, he might have developed a latent dramatic power which is perceptible even amongst the flimsy surroundings to which he has surrendered himself. We have not spoken of the pieces which created the greatest effect with the audience; these were a trifling Canzone, commencing the second act (beautifully sung by Miss Rose Hersee and encored), a quartettino, "Here, Geneviève;" an air, "Yes, I must leave you" (very archly given by Miss Josephine Yorke, and re-demanded), and a song, interpolated by Mr. Packard, we presume because Signor Cagnoni has really not furnished the tenor with a single effective piece. This, the very acme of common-place, was of course repeated, a compliment which the vocalist had a perfect right to take entirely to himself. The singing of Mr. Santley was throughout of the very highest order, and Mr. Lyall was as effective as usual in the part of Felicien. The call for the principal characters, and also for Mr. Rosa at the conclusion, was unanimous, and certainly never was more legitimately earned. We cannot but express our regret, however, that during the short time announced for these highly successful performances, so many evenings will be given up for repetitions of this work, especially when we consider the number of really meritorious operas waiting for a hearing. But presuming that we must look upon this as a merely experimental season, let us hope for better things in the future; and meantime cordially congratulate Mr. Rosa upon the able and conscientious manner in which he has carried out his views. We have left ourselves only space to say that, in addition to the operas we have mentioned, an English version of "Fra Diavolo," and Balfe's "Bohemian Girl" have been given, and most warmly received.

The prospectus of the twentieth series of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace is one of the most interesting yet issued. The following works will be given for the first time at this establishment, but some of them have been already heard in London:—Bach—a Sacred Cantata, "God's time is the best," for solo voices, chorus, and full orchestra; Suite for orchestra, and Solo Flute, in B minor. Handel—the Chandos Te Deum, in B flat. Haydn—Symphonies, in D, No. 8 of Salomon set; in E flat, No. 4 of new series (Rieter-Biedermann). Mozart—the Requiem; Concertante for violin and viola, in E flat. Beethoven—Selection from the Octet for two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons, and two horns (Op. 103); Selection from Serenade for flute, violin, and viola (Op. 25). Schubert—Grand Duo, in C (Op. 140), orchestrated by Joachim; Allegro for strings in C minor (1820). Mendelssohn—The 95th Psalm, with final chorus (MS.), "To the Sons of Art," for men's voices and brass instruments; Capriccio in E minor for strings. Schumann—Overture, "Rheinweinlied" (with chorus); Introduction and Allegro for piano and orchestra in D (Op. 134); selection from "Spanisches Liederspiel" (Op. 74) for a vocal quartet. Weber—Rondo all' Ongarese, for bassoon; Overture to "Peter Schmoll." Brahms—Rinaldo, Cantata for solo tenor, chorus of men's voices and orchestra (Op. 50). Raff—Symphony No. 4, in G minor; "Mazurka, Polonaise, and Russisch," from Op. 174, for orchestra, by the composer. Robert Volkmann—Overture to Shakspeare's "Richard III." Liszt—Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke (Mephisto Waltz) from "Zwei Episoden aus Lenau's Faust," for orchestra. A. Rubinstein—Concerto for piano and orchestra, No. 3; Scena for soprano and orchestra. Sir Julius Benedict—Andante and Finale from 2nd Symphony in C. Professor Macfarren—Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist." Henry H. Pierson—"Macbeth," a Symphonic Poem for orchestra. John Francis Barnett—Concerto for piano and orchestra. Henry Holmes—Concerto for violin and orchestra. E. Prout—Magnificat, for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. W. G. Cusins—Overture to "Love's Labour Lost." In addition to this list, the whole of Beethoven's Symphonies will be given in chronological order; Palestrina, Spohr, Hiller, Wagner, Sir Sterndale Bennett, and Sullivan will be represented; and it is announced that Alfred Holmes, H. Gadsby, and other English composers will contribute new works. The following artists have been already engaged:—Madame Lemmens, Madame Sinico, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Blanche Cole, Miss Rose Hersee, Signora Ostava Torriani, Mdlle. Cristino, Miss Sophie Löwe, Madame Osgood, Madame Patey, Madame Antoinette Sterling; Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Lloyd, Signor Foli, Mr. Patey, Mr. Whitney; Madame Neruda, Madame Essipoff, Miss Marie Krebs, Miss Zimmermann, Miss Anna Mehlig, Herr Joachim, Herr Wilhelmj, Mr. Henry Holmes, Mr. Carrodus, Signor Piatti, Mr. Charles Hallé, M. Mortier de Fontaine, Herr Pauer, Mr. Dannreuther, Mr. Oscar Beringer, and Mr. Franklin Taylor. When we say that Mr. Manns will retain his post as conductor, it will be seen that there is every prospect of a most successful season. The first concert takes place on the 2nd inst.

The works announced to be performed by the Brixton Choral Society during the coming season are "Elijah," "Judas Maccabæus," Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's "Hagar," and Dr. Macfarren's "Outward Bound." It is also probable that the "Messiah" will be given at Christmas. We are glad to find that for the public performances additional orchestral accompaniments have been secured. The concerts will be, as usual, under the direction of Mr. W. Lemare.

The laying of the first brick of the new National Opera House, on the Thames Embankment, by Mdlle Tietjens, and the laying of the first stone of the London Throat and Ear Hospital in the Gray's Inn Road, by Madame Adelina Patti, are events which deserve a record, as indicating the growing estimation of artists in this country. At the first of these ceremonials everything was conducted in a business-like manner—a more imposing programme perhaps being reserved for the day when His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is expected to lay the first stone of the building; but at the second a religious service was given, psalms being chanted by the London Vocal Union, and an Anthem by Mr. J. B. Calkin performed.

The prospectus of the Aldermanbury Musical Society announces that a meeting will take place on the 4th inst., for electing officers and revising the rules of the Association. Several leading artists are already engaged for the coming season, a list of standard works is given for rehearsal and performance, and there appears every prospect of the Society—which is principally composed of gentlemen connected with the large City houses of business—obtaining a large share of the public patronage and support.

At the forthcoming Harvest Festival at Christ Church, Clapham, on the 14th inst., Mozart's First Mass will be performed at the High Celebration, and Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" will be rendered in the evening as the Anthem. Both the works will be under the directorship of Mr. Richard Lemare, organist and choirmaster of the church, and in the evening Mr. W. S. Hoyte will preside at the organ. The "Benedictus" and "Agnus Dei" from the latter gentleman's new Communion Office will be sung in the morning.

On Saturday, the 4th ult., the members of the Cecilian Choir and their friends met at the Welsh Harp, Hendon. After tea, in the Large Hall, a concert was given to which the public were admitted free. During an interval in the concert, Mr. Hodd, on behalf of the members, presented the Conductor, Mr. W. H. Toynbee, with a handsome watch and chain, as a testimony of their appreciation of his worth. Mr. Toynbee, in returning thanks, referred to the origin of the Cecilian Choir, which has, during the last two summers, performed the outdoor concerts at the Crystal Palace, and will sing there on the 30th inst., after the fireworks.

At the St. George's Glee Union Monthly Concert on the 3rd ult., Mr. Arthur Sullivan's cantata, "On Shore and Sea," was performed to a crowded audience. The solos were assigned to Miss Janet King and Mr. J. Williams. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included the part-songs "Welcome Home," and "Softly fall," various songs by Messrs. Williams and Ellis, and a violin solo, "Fantasia Appassionata," Vieuxtemps, brilliantly played by Mr. Frank Amor. Mr. G. F. Smith, R.A.M., presided at the piano during the evening; and the choir was conducted by Mr. Garside, assisted by Mr. Stock.

A Harvest Thanksgiving Festival Service is announced to take place at the Crystal Palace on the 20th inst. The arrangements for the Festival are on a grand scale, and the centre transept will be specially and appropriately decorated. The music, which will comprise both sacred and secular pieces, and probably include a new work written for the occasion, will be performed by a chorus selected from the best London choirs and accompanied by a large band. The authorities desire the co-operation of organists and directors of choirs who wish to take part in the gathering. The musical arrangements will be superintended by Dr. Stainer.

REVIEWS.

Longmans, Green and Co.

On the Sensations of Tone as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music. By Hermann L. F. Helmholtz, M.D. Translated by Alexander J. Ellis, B.A., F.R.S. &c.

A review upon a work of such elaborate research as the one before us becomes an absolute impossibility. The result of an eight years' investigation of a science by a man who has of all others thoroughly proved his fitness for the task cannot be dismissed in a few brief sentences; and all we can do, therefore, is to indicate the nature of the book, and to counsel those who wish to acquire a sound and tangible knowledge of the laws of acoustics to study its pages. The assertion made by the Translator that musicians can "not only not get on much better without Acoustics than with, but that they really cannot get on without Acoustics at all," is one scarcely perhaps to be supported by facts; for it must prove that before the discoveries of Helmholtz were made known, composers had been writing in the dark, and that, as a consequence, those who come afterwards will so benefit by his theories as to leave us works which will throw all previous ones into the shade. But whatever mathematicians may say, musicians know that those creators of the undying compositions which have been bequeathed to us troubled themselves but little about Acoustics, or indeed about any severely æsthetical consideration of their work; a fact which seems almost admitted by Helmholtz when, after declaring that we seek to enhance our enjoyment in an artistic production by tracing out the suitability, connection and equilibrium of its separate parts, he says: "Our endeavour to comprehend the beauty of such a work by critical examination, in which we partly succeed, shows that we assume a certain adaptation to reason in works of art, which may possibly arise to a conscious understanding, although such understanding is neither necessary for the invention nor for the enjoyment of the beautiful." It is true that this observation is not applied exclusively to musical compositions; but where he afterwards speaks of the "system of musical tones and harmony," he grants "that its rules, although governed by the laws of artistic beauty, are slowly matured inventions of the artistic taste of musicians," a convincing proof that composers merely obey the laws which they find, until they require others, leaving the search into the origin of these laws to those who are thinkers rather than workers. The present, which is the third, edition of this work has been much more altered than the second, for in the meantime the author had been enabled to make use of the new physiological and anatomical researches on the ear, which has led to a modification of his views respecting the action of what are termed "Corti's arches." In the preface to this edition we have some well-considered replies to some of the strictures of critics upon Herr Helmholtz's views. After noticing many objections, he says: "To those who think I have not gone far enough in my physical explanations, I answer that, in the first place a natural philosopher is never bound to erect systems about everything he knows and does not know." With this assertion we perfectly agree, and also with the following paragraph respecting the Minor Mode: "Musicians have found fault with the manner in which I have characterised the Minor Mode. I must refer in reply to those very accessible documents, the musical compositions of A.D. 1500 to A.D. 1750, during which the modern Minor was developed. These will show how slow and fluctuating was its development, and that the last traces of its incomplete state are still visible in the works of Sebastian Bach and Handel."

The main design of the book may be best gathered from the following passage, with which the Introduction commences:—

"In the present work an attempt will be made to form a connection between the boundaries of two sciences, which, although drawn together by many natural relations, have hitherto remained sufficiently distinct—the boundaries of physical and physiological acoustics on the one side, and of musical science and æsthetics on the other. The classes of readers addressed will consequently have had very different cultivation, and will be affected by very different interests. It will therefore be best for the author at the outset distinctly to state his intention in undertaking the work, and the aim he has sought to attain. The horizons of physics, philosophy and art have of late been too widely separated, and, as a consequence, the language, the methods and the aims of any one of these studies present a certain amount of difficulty for the student of any other of them; and possibly this is the principal cause why the problem here undertaken has not been long ago more thoroughly considered and advanced towards its solution."

It is perfectly true, as our author asserts, that hitherto the physical part of the theory of sound has been almost exclusively treated at length, although it is essentially but a section of the laws regulating the motions of elastic bodies: the physiological theory of acoustics—the investigation of the processes which take place within the ear itself—has been but imperfectly investigated, and this, as the title of the book indicates, is what Helmholtz asserts to be the true basis for the theory of music. The First Part of the volume is essentially physical and physiological, and contains a general investigation of the phenomenon of harmonic upper partial tones, the nature of which is established, and its relation to quality of tone proved. The Second Part is devoted to an enquiry into the disturbances produced by the simultaneous production of two tones, namely the combinational tones and beats. The Third Part treats of the construction of musical scales and notes. As we have already said, we can but acquaint our readers with the general scope of a work of such gigantic dimensions, for were we to give pages of extracts, but the faintest idea of the masterly manner in which all these subjects are handled could be formed. Mr. Ellis's share in the production of this English version of Helmholtz's labours must not be passed over without the warmest praise. For this task not only a thorough knowledge of the language in which the philosopher originally clothed his thoughts is absolutely necessary, but a deep insight into the subjects upon which he treats, and these qualifications the translator has thoroughly proved that he possesses in the highest degree. It may also be said that his notes, which are plentiful throughout the volume, are of the utmost value; and the Appendices, for the opinions in which Mr. Ellis is alone responsible, contain a large amount of interesting matter bearing upon the views of Helmholtz, amongst which we find a re-arrangement of his four papers read before the Royal Society in 1864 and 1874 respecting the difference between just and tempered intonation.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Iphigenia in Tauris. An Opera, in four acts; composed by C. von Gluck. Edited by Berthold Tours. The English version by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

IN explaining the views which it was his aim to carry out in his operas, Gluck says: "I wished to confine the art of music to its real object—that of aiding the effect of poetry by giving greater expression to the words and scenes; but without detriment to the action of the plot, and without weakening the impression by useless ornamentation; and I was of opinion that this ought to be effected in the same manner as brilliancy of colour and judicious contrast of light and shade heighten the effect of correct and well-designed drawing, and give life and expression to the figures without effacing the outline." When we find that Wagner, acting strictly upon the principles here laid down, has not only created a revolution with a large portion of the artistic public, but has had an opera-house expressly built to display his lyrical productions to the greatest advantage, it might reasonably be imagined that Gluck, in his operas, had failed to perfectly illustrate his theory. Let those who believe this study the opera now before us, and we have little doubt of the result. Iphigenia in Tauris is not only a mine of wealth, considered as abstract music, but is in every respect as perfect an embodiment of the composer's opinions upon operatic art as any work of Wagner's. But the public was not to be so easily moved in the days of Gluck; and when Herder said, "Some one will before long advance on him," he spoke truly, for the prophet of the "future" has but moulded himself upon the prophet of the "past." We may say that this recent addition to Novello's Operatic Library is most carefully edited, and that the English translation is excellent.

Dixit Dominus. Motett for Double Choir. Composed by Samuel Wesley.

IF this were the only composition of its author, it would be sufficient to establish his reputation, not only as a producer but as a man of the profoundest knowledge. As a study of contrapuntal and vocal effects and a guide to the limitations of tonality, aspirants to musical degrees at the Universities might well avail themselves of such a model, at the same time observing the consummate art with which some fresh application of the themes is always held in reserve to sustain the interest; and what a climax may be reached by refraining from the use of chromatic chords and extreme modulations, until the surprise of their sudden appearance in the coda proves that their best effect lies in a sparing use of them. The work is entirely founded on three principal themes, of great interest in themselves and well contrasted with each other; these are combined in various ways and interspersed occasionally with a few bars of sustained harmony. A new point is introduced in the coda, for which, as already hinted, are reserved powerful harmonic as well as vocal effects. Before concluding these remarks, as we have particularly recommended this composition for purposes of study, it may be well to point out features which we do not think should serve as precedents to students. The effect of the dominant seventh, p. 8, score 1, bar 3, is wonderfully fresh, but loses force when it recurs on page 11. The effect of the progressions, p. 14, score 1, bars 3 to 4, and p. 15, score 2, bars 6 to 7, is of a seventh descending to the root and of octaves between extreme parts. To the eye everything is regular, while our sense of hearing detects that the spirit, if not the letter, of the law is infringed upon. Not that this is to be esteemed a fault in the work we are considering, but an error in judgment, through following too closely and faithfully the traditions of the great contrapuntists. No one would blame a citizen of 500 years ago for believing that the earth was stationary, while a persistent avowal of the facts now-a-days would be a sign of bigotry or ignorance. The forbidden progressions of consecutive 5ths and 8ths are now in some cases considered legitimate with the ear as umpire, while the means taken by early writers to avoid them can only be regarded as clever impositions.

The Canticles of the Church. Arranged to Gregorian Tones. By J. Stainer.

The first and second series of these arrangements appeared some years ago in a smaller form, but the third has been lately written. The following direction appears on the first sheet of the first series:—"The choir to be divided into melodists and harmonists. When the melody is not on a separate line, it will be found in the upper line of the short score." This explains sufficiently the plan of the work, and the various effects aimed at by writing for the voices in harmony or unison, or giving the organ an independent part. It would have been well if Dr. Stainer had printed further directions, explaining the different values of the notes employed, and whether any definite time attaches to them, or if such matters are to be left to individual taste and judgment. It is impossible to avoid some doubtful accents in setting every verse of a hymn like the English version of the Te Deum to one melody, and the varied sentiments of the text must in such cases obtain their expression from the harmony. While exercising considerable tact and judgment to meet the former difficulty, Dr. Stainer has evidently revelled in his task of finding suitable harmonies which, without being crude, should vary in accordance with the sense. The second series is on the same plan, but in the third several tones are used in each canticle, which considerably lightens the duties of the arranger. In conclusion, we have only to remark that whether such transcriptions as these are considered as impious desecrations of a venerable monument or ingenious presentations of an old enemy in a friendly garb, admirers and opponents of the so-called Gregorian Tones will unite in praising the result of Dr. Stainer's labours.

Benedictus, Gloria Tibi, Gratias, and Sursum Corda. For Four Voices. The same for Voices in Unison and Organ. By Berthold Tours.

These four pieces form portions of the Morning, Communion, and Evening Service in F, the nine numbers of which are published separately. Mr. Tours has certainly managed very cleverly to obtain from the same compositions two totally different effects. Unlike the ordinary Unison Services that come under our notice, which are as a rule Services in parts with the voices singing the highest, he has preserved the organ accompaniment of his four-part service, and made a new melody for the voices by combining into one part the most fitting passages in each. In so thoughtful and musicianly a composition it is difficult to select any passage for particular commendation, and indeed there is nothing from beginning to end which interferes with the pleasant impression conveyed.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in the key of A♭. By A. H. Mann.

The improvements that have been from time to time effected in the organ, have naturally altered the character of music written for the instrument; and whereas originally in Church use it served merely to accompany the choir, now-a-days composers of church music are more and more endeavouring to treat it as a necessary independent feature in their compositions. Mr. Mann has done this with good effect, and by avoiding passages of a florid nature, has preserved the solemn feeling not only suited to the instrument, but to all church music and the acoustical qualities of the buildings where it is likely to be performed. We are also pleased to observe the attention that has evidently been directed to the form of the composition; as a rule, the announcement of a service in a particular key means that the opening bars and, with good fortune, the last few chords satisfy our hopes of its truth. Here we have, perhaps, too much of the key of A♭, but at least amply sufficient to confirm the fact we read in the title-page. It is, moreover, satisfactory to be able to point out passages which may be called "leading themes," that by their recurrence induce intelligibility and a satisfactory shapeliness. The broad unison phrase with which the Magnificat opens, re-appears (after a free episode) at the sixth verse and again in the Gloria, while the point of imitation to the words, "He hath put down the mighty from their seats," is afterwards heard in the second verse of the Gloria. Throughout the whole Service the voices are particularly well treated, good effect being obtained by writing for sopranos and tenors in octaves, as in p. 5, score 2, bars 3 to 6. The Nunc Dimittis and ninth verse of the Magnificat are examples of the author's happy manner of securing a charming vocal effect; in each case the melody being given to a tenor solo voice while the chorus sings an accompaniment (pp). These are but selections from the numerous points of interest presented by the work, and while we bear testimony to the talent and originality the author displays, we have no doubt that even better fruit than this will spring from their alliance with a wider experience and a more developed scholarship.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (on a Rouennais Theme). By George Herbert Gregory, Mus. Bac.

These Canticles are arranged according to the same plan that Dr. Stainer has employed in his setting of them to the Gregorian Tones, which the Rouennais Theme closely resembles in character. We still think it necessary that some explanatory rules should be appended for the guidance of choirmasters.

Te Deum Laudamus, with Two Kyrie Eleisons, and Two Doxologies, with Accompaniment for Organ or Pianoforte. By C. Riechelmann.

The Te Deum is in the key of F, and may be described as an unskilful series of modulations, terminating with a full close in the key of C. Such progressions as these—shew that the author is on the very threshold of musical composition.

Sanctus and Gloria in Excelsis Deo. Composed by R. R. Ross.

These movements are written "in completion of the Communion Service in G." The author is evidently much impressed with the manner of the early Church writers, whose influence is manifest in the pages before us. Music is still progressive, and the time has not come when, as in architecture, the designer must choose among the schools of various epochs the one he prefers to follow. We suppose that in the future there will be a school of pre-Beethoven composers, as there are now pre-Raphaelite painters. Desirable as such an event may seem to ultra-Conservatives, it has not yet arrived, and, at present, imitations, however clever, are not in season.

Offertory Sentences. By Alfred R. Gaul, Mus. Bac.

The first series of these sentences was noticed by us nearly a year ago, and Mr. Gaul has now added another set of ten, which may be procured separately, or in one volume, containing the two series. We think Mr. Gaul's second attempt is even more successful than his first. He does more than write correct harmony and pretty melody, for each number is a thoughtful and well-considered piece of music, suiting the words admirably, and containing vocal effects that cannot fail to charm in performance.

The Lord knoweth the days of the Godly. Anthem. Composed by the Rev. William Statham, B.A.

This Anthem was composed for the annual Festival, 1875, of the Frodsham Deaneries' Choral Association, of which the author is choirmaster. We have been already impressed with Mr. Statham's compositions that have come under our notice, and can only say that, if he teaches as well as he writes, he must be doing good work in his corner of the county of Cheshire. It is most satisfactory to meet with compositions that confirm the laws and traditions we regard as binding and view with reverence; for amid the lawlessness that is spreading in the musical world, one's convictions receive rude shocks at times from those powerful minds who regard themselves as the sources of knowledge, and speak disparagingly of Anderson's Songs of Zion. Music by Robert Anderson.

The series consists of thirty-four numbers, contained in eight parts, and one double number. The music is of varied merit, occasionally almost common-place, but in some instances, such as Nos. 3, 7, and 12, full of evident thought and care; all are characterised by easy flowing melodies which are sure of popular acceptance. The words are by various writers; amongst others, the Bishop of Lincoln, Bishop Heber, the Rev. J. H. Heskins, the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, and Mrs. Hugh Miller.

Second Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin. Composed by Agnes Zimmermann.

A closer acquaintance with this work enables us to confirm the highly favourable impression it made on its performance in two successive seasons at the composer's concerts. The first movement, in A minor, is a model of refined and intellectual writing; the theme, in the relative major, modulating with charming effect into E minor, is exceedingly original and quaint, and its treatment throughout most skilful, especially where it steals in unexpectedly in E major. The fresh subject of the "Scherzo," in D minor, with the melodious Cantabile, in G major, combine to form a movement which will doubtless become the favourite in every concert-room where the Sonata is heard. The "Andante," in F, commences with a smooth melody of most winning character, and includes some highly effective modulation, the passages being written throughout with much judgment, and always with the keenest appreciation of that sympathy which must ever be preserved between the two instruments, a characteristic which, in the desire for display, is too often lost sight of. The last movement is hardly so much to our mind as those which precede it; but it is well written, and exhibits both performers to the utmost advantage. Again, too, we have some very excellent modulations, especially near the conclusion, the piece ending in the tonic major. One transition—from the chord of A major to F major—on page 32, we especially admire; but, as a rule, the passages scarcely seem as spontaneous as the composer has accustomed us to expect in her works; and this we may freely say, considering how warmly and conscientiously we have expressed our admiration of the rest of the Sonata.

Andante for the Pianoforte (from Sonata No. 1). Composed by E. A. Sydenham.

The fact of composers constantly publishing movements of works written in the classical form proves a timidity perfectly excusable on the part of the writers, but at the same time furnishes unmistakable evidence that the public, like a delicate patient, must have nutritious food administered gradually. Even the musicians of the present generation can well remember the time when a concert-giver would have been considered stark mad if he attempted to play a Sonata in public; and in private such compositions, if they ever crept into the light at all, were branded as "heavy," and consigned to the lumber-room. The reform in musical tuition and the rise of "Pianoforte Recitals," have certainly materially altered this state of things; but modern composers have still to be cautious, for those who are gaining a love for compositions cast in the classical form are usually content with the works of the old writers, and scarcely can be brought to believe that the master they are accustomed to receive a lesson from can write a Sonata "after the manner of the ancients." If Mr. Sydenham has sufficient courage to publish the "Sonata No. 1," we shall be glad to see it, for certainly the "Andante" extracted from it is in every respect a highly meritorious composition, and shows that his musical training has been in the right direction. The themes are melodious, and the writing throughout spontaneous and intelligible; the modulations grow up naturally, and the composer seems to have acquired the art of saying what he has got to say without any unnecessary display.

A wet sheet and a flowing sea. Four-part Song. Words by Allan Cunningham.

Beauty was lying by a spring. Four-part Song. Words from an Elizabethan source.

A sunny shaft did I behold. Four-part Song. Words from Coleridge's "Zapolya."

Composed by Charles Harford Lloyd.

The first of these part-songs is written for two tenors and two basses, and although carefully voiced, has a common-place melody, the modulation into the dominant at the end of the 8th bar being rather too conventional to create interest, even with the passages of imitation which accompany it. In the second song—the words "from an Elizabethan source"—whatever that may mean—the subject is more attractive, and we have some effective modulations. The change into the sub-dominant, immediately before the final cadence, on page 4, is, however, to us somewhat unpleasant, an awkward effect being created by the G natural in the soprano in such close proximity with the G sharp. "A sunny shaft did I behold" is unquestionably the best of the three songs; the theme is well adapted to the words, and the parts flow smoothly and naturally throughout. The manner in which the word "away" dies off at the conclusion is extremely effective; indeed, to our mind this composition is so much better—both in melody and harmony—than its companions, that it seems almost to be by another hand. Mr. Lloyd has, we hope, written these songs in the order in which we have placed them.

Paterson and Sons.

A Simple Plan for acquiring facility in reading music, and a Few remarks about Pianoforte playing. By The Honble. Mrs. Henry Chetwynd.

The title of this work would lead us to imagine that something very novel has been attempted, and that, before circulating it amongst the general public, the opinions of those presumed to be competent to judge upon its merits are sought, as testimonials of its efficiency. In what, however, our authoress's "plan" differs from the others which have come before us we are at a loss to understand. The "lettered gamut," which is to be placed before the child, seems to us a copy of the many artificial guides of the same kind which we have often seen and commented upon; and indeed, as far as we can recollect, appears, with very slight modification, in the majority of Pianoforte Instruction-books. We are told that the use of this pictorial key-board is to be permitted "as long as the pupil wishes to have it;" but we doubt very much whether the student and the teacher will agree as to the proper time for taking away the prop which has so long been the only support; and still more do we question whether, when it is withdrawn, the pupil will have as clear an idea of the subject as if the names of the notes on the pianoforte and in the staff had been studied in the ordinary manner, and then gradually transferred, by simple music, from the paper to the key-board. One important point to be recollected in teaching children is that the key-board and the notation are at variance with each other—the former being arranged in symmetrical sequence, and the latter representing an unbroken ladder; and we think it better, therefore, that this discrepancy, instead of being placed at once before the eye, should dawn upon the pupil by degrees, just as we believe that the scales which present a mental difficulty should be kept back until the comparatively easy ones are mastered. It is not so good to be eternally telling young people how far they have got to travel, as to lead them gently along the preliminary stages of the journey, and point out the beauties by the roadside. The remarks on pianoforte playing are extremely good; and we are glad to find the growing desire to draw the attention of teachers to the important matter of "phrasing." It is truly said, "That subtle sense given of a lull or breathing space, often without an actual pause, that indicates a change of thought or passing emotion, is the finished part of what is called expression, and makes the great charm of some playing. People miss it, and often do not know why some playing completely satisfies them, while the same thing in the hands of another fails to produce any impression." The necessity of cultivating the mental as well as the physical powers of the young pupil cannot be urged too strongly; and as this must rest with the master alone, we live in hopes of seeing the time when the solo pianist shall be as distinct an individual from the "pianoforte teacher" as the solo vocalist is from the "professor of singing." The lessons which conclude this "plan," intended to be written from dictation, contain several inaccuracies. In No. 1, bar 2, E is printed twice over, and always named C. In the directions for dictating No. 2, G is called "above line," and the same G is afterwards mentioned as being a "ledger line." Then the notes which follow, and progress downwards, have the mark "5th and 6th octaves" over them. This is to us incomprehensible; for if they are intended to be an octave higher, what can the words "on the lines" mean; and again it may be said that, as two of them are in the spaces, even supposing that they are meant to be where they are written, they should be named as "in the staff." For learners, such matters are very important; and if the method is to be of any service, the sooner these errors are corrected the better. The authoress is evidently in earnest, and we are certain, therefore, will forgive us for pointing out the little defects which have been already mentioned, as well as for asking her to reconsider the wording of her sentences on page 2, and especially in a second edition of the book to spell Moscheles' name with a single "l."

Lamborn Cock.

Ricordanza, for the Pianoforte.

Low dies the day. Four-part Song. Words by Elliott Stock. Composed by Henry Charles Banister.

The pianoforte piece, appropriately entitled "Ricordanza," is said by Mr. Banister to have been "composed for his sister Rose," and we may begin by heartily congratulating this young lady upon having so accomplished and refined a musician to compose for her: the more such elegant sketches are multiplied, the greater chance there will be of training pianists away from the maudlin trifles of the day, and towards the undying works of the great writers of the world. The placid and melodious subject of this little sketch is made additionally attractive by the harmony with which it is clothed. Opening in C major, the change into A flat is perfectly charming, and the unaffected treatment of the theme at the conclusion is thoroughly in sympathy with the nature of the piece. We especially like the transient modulations, commencing on the 4th bar of the last page, the 6-4 on the dominant of C major having a quaint and unexpected effect, after the chord of D flat. Again, in the four-part song, we have some happy examples of Mr. Banister's faculty of supplying effective and legitimate harmonies to a subject. The two dominant chords, with the triad of the sixth of the scale between, before the first pause at the double bar, give a flavour of the older time which we perhaps scarcely expect in a series of "Modern Four-part Songs," of which this forms No. 48. A good point, too, is the change into the tonic minor on the words, "O list my plaint," and the ascent of the soprano to C, with the suspended F in the alto, before the return to the major, may be also mentioned as well-considered and most appropriate effects. We are inclined to believe these to be the best compositions of Mr. Banister which have yet come before us.

Metzler and Co.

Te Deum Laudamus. Set to music in the key of G. By Charles Bradley.

Mr. Bradley displays considerable intelligence in the setting of the words and no slight knowledge of the resources of harmony. We cannot but admire the care which prompts him to affix to each change of time a metronome mark, thus endeavouring to secure a faithful rendering of the music. Even though such a practice may be dispensed with in compositions of a not very extended character, we should like to see it more generally followed in important works than is usually the case.

Published by the Composer.

Te Deum and Jubilate in C, with four Kyries and Glorias. By H. V. Lewis, R.A.M.

It is sufficient to say of these pieces that, with the exception of one or two doubtful places, they are carefully and correctly written. Their general character shows that Mr. Lewis has at some period been impressed by Dr. Nares's Service in F.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

HOW SHOULD ORGANISTS BE SELECTED?

To the Editor of the Musical Times.

Sir,—As Mr. Spinney expresses a hope that his letter on Organists' Appointments in the September issue of the Musical Times may lead to some discussion, may I be permitted to offer a few remarks on this subject, which is, doubtless, one of much interest to a large body of your readers?

I quite agree with Mr. Spinney that the usual method of selecting an organist is generally unsatisfactory in its results, but I fear his suggestion with regard to a visit of the umpire at the applicant's appointment would not work fairly in all cases. It frequently happens that a clever organist and choirmaster is compelled by circumstances to officiate at a church where a musical service is supposed to be "Popish" and "Ritualistic," and it would be manifestly unfair to judge of his capabilities from a service in which the only music allowed consisted of chants and Psalm tunes.

The better plan seems to me to be as follows:—Having chosen two or three names from the applications sent in, let each gentleman be invited to conduct the services and choir rehearsals for a fortnight. He would thus be brought into constant communication with the clergy and choir, and would also be tested in every duty connected with his office.

I cannot help thinking, that in making a selection, preference should be given to those who have done all in their power to prove their competency by passing University or other examinations. If this idea was carried out, I am convinced we should not meet with so many cases of persons in business, city clerks, &c., holding appointments at good churches, and thus keeping out of employment those who naturally look to their profession for their daily bread. By-the-way, Mr. Spinney seems to have an idea that the Universities examine chiefly on musical history. It is certainly true that this subject forms part of the examination, but I think those who have taken degrees will agree with me, that history is by no means the leading feature in the papers.

I must confess, I cannot bring myself to believe that every member of the congregation has a right to expect his or her peculiar views on the subject of Church music to be considered by the organist. General experience proves that in trying to please everybody we please nobody, and I feel sure the right course is to do the best that good taste and experience can suggest, and to steadily disregard the desires of "sentimental, operatic, and more particularly of rich members of the congregation," should they wish for music which is unsuited to the solemnity of Divine Service. This can always be done without giving needless offence, and in the end such persons will be compelled to admit the justice of the organist's views and the soundness of his conclusions. The clergy have it in their power to lighten the labours of an organist and choirmaster by giving him hearty support at the choir practices. By this I do not mean that they should assume any share in the direction of the practice, so far as the rehearsal of the music is concerned; for, as a rule, clergymen do not possess the technical knowledge necessary for this purpose. If, however, the vicar would but let the choir see that he has full and complete confidence in his organist, and believes him to be the best man he can obtain for the church, I am convinced things would go on much more pleasantly, and that the frequent "humiliations," of which Mr. Spinney complains, would speedily disappear.

I imagine most organists will take exception to Mr. Spinney's definition of their duties, especially as regards choir practices. Certainly five rehearsals each week cannot be necessary for a choir of ordinary ability, and even if such were the case, an organist receiving an average stipend could not fairly be called upon to devote such a large share of his time to the Church.

It is almost saddening to peruse the advertisement columns of the Musical Times and other journals, and observe the beggarly sums which are named as salaries for really good churches, and often with the intimation that "none but competent persons need apply." As if "competent" organists could be obtained for a sum which, on a time calculation, would be rejected with scorn by any working mechanic! At present a church above £50 per annum is regarded as a prize, and the number of applications which are received for such a post is quite astonishing.

Here lies the real fault. Let the church authorities come forward fairly and offer reasonable salaries without references to "a good opening for teaching," and they will find that well-educated and clever musicians will accept their appointments, and speedily raise the services to the desired standard.

Yours faithfully,
HUMPHREY J. STARK.

MISS ENRIQUEZ.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—It having been announced by the Committee of the Norwich Musical Festival that the pieces previously allotted to me (Miss Enriquez) would be taken by another singer, various interpretations have been placed upon that announcement. I shall feel greatly obliged if you will allow me to state, through your columns, that the reason of my non-appearance at the Festival according to my engagement is, that the Committee were not able to carry out the contract as first arranged with me, and which was, therefore, cancelled by mutual consent.

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,

BUCKHURST-HILL.—On Friday Evening last, the 24th ult., a Special Service was held in the Congregational Church, Palmerston-road, on the occasion of opening a new organ, which has been presented by a member of the congregation. The instrument (which is a very fine one, and has been built by Messrs. Maley, Young and Oldknow, of Ossulston-street, N.W.) was opened by Mr. W. Latter, R.A.M., Mr. J. C. Priggen, and Mr. A. H. Tozer, the organist. The service consisted of selections from the Messiah, &c., the solo parts being taken by Mr. A. E. Hooper, and the choruses by a special choir of 100 voices. A short address on the subject of congregational music was given by the pastor, Rev. W. H. Charlesworth.

CARTMEL.—The third annual festival of the Choral Union was celebrated on Wednesday afternoon, the 8th ult., in the Priory Church. The choirs taking part in the service were those of Cartmel, Grange, Lindale, Staveley, Haverthwaite, and Broughton, comprising 140 voices, under the leadership of Mr. Bather, F.C.O. Mr. W. J. Lamb presided at the organ. The Psalms were the 19th, 104th, and 150th, set to single chants selected from Monk and Ouseley's Psalter. The Magnificat and Deus Misereatur were sung to single chants by Hayes and Havergal. The anthem was "O how amiable are Thy dwellings," (Barnby) which was given with remarkable precision and expression. The Rev. Canon Prescott, B.D., of Carlisle, preached an excellent and appropriate sermon. Handel's Grand March in Scipio was played as the congregation left the Church. Great credit is due to the choirmaster for the manner in which the choristers acquitted themselves, considerable improvement being manifested in the singing generally.

CHELTENHAM.—The prospectus of Mr. J. A. Matthews's Choral Society shows that he is resolved to support the high character which this Association has gained during the last five seasons. Amongst many standard works which are promised, we find Handel's Samson and the Messiah; Mendelssohn's Elijah and Hymn of Praise; Spohr's cantata, God, Thou art great, and W. H. Cummings's cantata, The Fairy Ring. Samson, and the Hymn of Praise are announced for the first subscription concert.

DARESBURY.—The nineteenth anniversary of the Choral Association of the combined Deaneries of East and West Frodsham was held on Thursday afternoon, August 26th. The choirs represented were:—Over Tabley, 9; Latchford, 30; Daresbury, 8; Stretton, 32; Thelwall, 25; Grappenhall, 25; Stockton Heath, 30; Runcorn, 22; Ellesmere Port, 26; Frodsham, 15; Dutton, 9; Weaverham, 17; Crowton, 17; Little Leigh, 17, the total number of singers being 282. The interior of the church was very effectively decorated. Wreaths of evergreens were entwined around the capitals of the stone pillars, and a handsome banneret was suspended at the spring of each of the arches. Divine service commenced by the choirs singing as a processional hymn, "Rejoice, ye pure in heart," to W. H. Monk in B flat ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"). The introductory sentences and exhortation were intoned by the Rev. Wm. Statham, Vicar of Ellesmere Port, and Choirmaster to the Frodsham Deaneries Choral Association. The service was Tallis's. The special psalms, 103 and 104, were chanted to W. F. Crossley and W. Savage. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were set to Gregorian chants, the 6th and 5th tones respectively. The anthem commencing "The Lord knoweth the days of the godly," by the Rev. W. Statham, was rendered with a vigour and precision which did credit to the singers. The hymn before the sermon was selected from "Hymns Ancient and Modern"—"Rejoice to-day with one accord;" and after the sermon from the Appendix—"O Lord of heaven, and earth, and sea," set to music by the Rev. J. B. Dykes. The hymn, "Praise the Lord" (W. H. Monk), was sung as a recessional at the close of the service. Miss Kate Ockleston, the organist of Over Tabley Church, presided at the organ, and showed great aptness in keeping the choir well together.

EXETER.—Two highly successful entertainments were given on the 8th and 10th ult., at the Royal Public Rooms, consisting of Readings from the Poets and Humourists, by Mr. Jas. Wheeler, Jun., interspersed with some excellent songs by Miss Grace Godolphin, of the Royal Academy of Music. Signor Alverdi and Mr. Stone (Crediton) presided at the pianoforte.

FOLKESTONE.—The Dedication Festival in the Parish Church of SS. Mary and Eanswythe commenced on Wednesday, the 8th ult., and was continued until the 15th ult., which completed the octave. In addition to the daily celebration, Matins, Evensong and Litany at the appointed times, a special preacher was appointed for each day. The services were choral, and the effective ministrations of precentor, choir and organists showed that the musical arrangements were of a very high order. The most striking feature in the musical services was the evening anthem "Hallelujah" (Engedi), Beethoven, sung by a choir of 40 voices with full organ and orchestral accompaniments. The precentor, the Rev. F. Tapply, Curate of Folkestone, acted as conductor during the anthem. The close of the Festival was marked by a ceremony of peculiar interest—the ordination, by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Bloemfontein, of the Rev. — Allum, for the last year the active and highly valued lay helper in the Mission Chapel of St. Augustine, Folkestone. The success of the dedication service has been mainly owing to the energetic and devoted vicar and to the Rev. F. Tapply.

GLASGOW.—The prospectus of the Glasgow Choral Union announces that nine Subscription Concerts will be given during the coming session, three of which will be choral and six orchestral. At the choral concerts the Messiah, Israel in Egypt, and Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio, Eli, (under the direction of the composer) will be performed. The orchestral concerts are to be conducted by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the band consisting of about fifty thoroughly efficient performers. All the choral works will be rendered by the members of the Union, under the able directorship of their conductor, Mr. Lambeth.

HERNE BAY.—On Thursday evening, the 23rd ult., a very successful Concert was given at the Town Hall, for the benefit of the Promenade Band, which, judging from the crowded state of the room, has (under its indefatigable conductor, Mr. Wood,) evidently given much satisfaction to the inhabitants and visitors during the past season. Mr. Stedman was highly appreciated in his two songs, as was also the very admirable glee-singing of Messrs. Plant, Moulding and Rhodes, of the Cathedral Choir, Canterbury.

High Elswick.—For some years past, Mr. Charles Henry Shepherd, A.R.A., has gratuitously discharged the duties of organist and choir-master at St. Paul's Church, and, having recently retired from those positions, the members of the choir and of the congregation determined to present a testimonial to him, in acknowledgment of his services in connection with the church. Upwards of 100*l.* was subscribed, and a portion of the money expended in the purchase of a timepiece, which chimes the quarter-hours on eight bells, in imitation of the chimes of the clock in the tower of the Houses of Parliament. A beautifully illuminated address was also prepared, and the remainder of the money, in a purse, formed part of the testimonial. A meeting was held on the 27th of August in St. Paul's School, Victoria Street, at which the presentation was made. The chair was occupied by the Rev. Jos. Slack, curate of St. Paul's. The Rev. E. Humble, of Greenside, in presenting the testimonial, referred to the high position which Mr. Shepherd has secured for himself as a musician; and to the fact that he had employed his musical talents in the service of the Church. Mr. Shepherd thanked them for the gifts, and, in doing so, referred to the great value of music in connection with public worship.

Hounslow.—An extremely good programme was provided for the supporters of Mrs. Smart at her Concert on Saturday evening, the 25th ult.; she was assisted by Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom were highly successful.

Leeds.—On Friday, the 10th ult., selections from Maritana were given at the Edinburgh Hall, the vocalists being the Yorkshire Concert Party, consisting of Miss Pauline Grayston (Mrs. Taylor), Miss Emma Kennedy, Mr. J. H. Goodhall, and Mr. Dodds. The chief airs, duets, and trios from the opera were ably rendered, and the audience, though never stirred to enthusiasm, were encouraging in the applause bestowed. "In happy moments," by Mr. Dodds; "Scenes that are brightest," by Miss Grayston; "Alas! those chimes," by Miss Kennedy; and "Let me like a soldier fall," by Mr. Goodhall, were specially appreciated.

Newbury.—On the 31st August, the Reading contingent of the Crystal Palace Temperance Choir, numbering 150 voices, gave a very successful Concert in the Town Hall, under the presidency of the Mayor. Mr. T. Waite conducted and Mr. T. J. Read, Fell. Coll. Org., accompanied. Part of the funds were for the Temperance Hall, which has just been opened. The hall was crowded to excess. A Musical Society has just been formed (of which Mr. G. H. Bates is the instructor) for the practice of vocal and instrumental music.

Penzance.—On the 10th ult. an Organ Recital was given in St. John's Hall by Mr. Hoyte, Organist of All Saints, London. The programme was an admirable one, and sufficiently varied to give the audience an idea of the power and impressiveness of the organ, as well as of its delicacy and sweetness. During the evening Messrs. Hoyte and R. White, Jun., played a duet for the piano and harmonium by Prout. Another feature of the evening's entertainment was the singing of two part-songs, by Messrs. M. Sampson, S. White, Wills, and J. Berryman, both of which were encored. The concert throughout was a success.

Redhill.—The Report of the Redhill Harmonic Society, which has recently been published, shows that although not in a highly flourishing financial condition, the Association has been the means of drawing together from all quarters members of the musical profession, as well as the most enthusiastic of local amateurs. The Society was established in 1871, and since that time Judas Maccabœus, the Messiah, Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, Bennett's May Queen, the Creation, Mozart's 12th Mass, Gounod's Faust, Beethoven's Engedi, and Acis and Galatea have been most successfully performed before large audiences in the Market Hall. Mr. Pringuer, the founder of the Society, has been the Conductor at these concerts, and the orchestra has invariably been led by Mr. Weist Hill, the now energetic and successful Conductor of the Alexandra Palace string and brass band. Amongst the vocalists who have appeared at Redhill, are Miss Annie Sinclair, Mr. A. Byron, Mr. W. Winn, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Miss Edith Wynne. The next concert is fixed to take place as near Christmas as possible, when the Woman of Samaria, by the late Sir S. Bennett, and a selection of miscellaneous vocal and instrumental music will be given.

Sibbertoft.—The Choral Society of Sibbertoft (under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Barton) gave its tenth concert on Wednesday, the 15th ult., when Schumann's Pilgrimage of the Rose was performed in a highly creditable manner. Mr. Barton and Mr. Julian Berkeley played Schubert's Fantasia in F minor (pianoforte duet). Mr. Frank Barton, a solo by Chopin, and Mr. Julian Berkeley Schumann's "Papillons," Op. 2, No. 1. The other chief feature of interest was the well-known aria from Tannhäuser, "Star of Eve." This Society has for some years been trying to introduce to its audience the works (both instrumental and choral) of the great masters.

Stafford.—At the opening of the New Organ in the Congregational Chapel, Martin Street, a Recital of sacred music was given by Mr. E. Shargool. The organ has been erected by Messrs. J. Banfield and Son, of Birmingham, and contains Great Organ, CC to G; Open Diapason, 8ft.; Viol de Gamba, 8ft.; Dulciana, 8ft.; Stop Diapason and Clarabella, 8ft.; Principal, 4ft.; Flute, 4ft.; Fifteenth, 2ft.; Sesquialtra, three ranks, various; Trumpet, 8ft. Swell Organ, CC to G; Leiblich Bourdon, 16ft.; Open Diapason, 8ft.; Leiblich Gedact, 8ft.; Gemshorn, 4ft.; Mixture, two ranks, 12th and 15th; Hautboy, 3ft. Couplers: Swell to Pedals, Great to Pedals, Swell to Great. Bourdon Pedal Pipes, CCC to F, 30 notes. At the services on the 29th August, Mr. W. A. Marson, Organist of Christ Church, presided at the organ, and the choir was conducted by Mr. W. Bagnall. The collection amounted to 15*l.*

Weybridge.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Service took place on Tuesday evening, the 21st ult., at S. James's Church, which was beautifully and artistically decorated with wheat, fruit, and flowers. Evensong commenced at eight o'clock. The opening voluntaries were played by Mr. H. P. G. Brooke, organist and director of the choir. The processional, "Come, ye thankful people, come" (S. George), sung in unison; Ely confession; Tallis's Responses; proper Psalms, 65, 145 (Sir G. Elvey's single chants in A and E), 148 (Dr. Dykes's single chant in F); the Canticles, Cantate and Deus (S. James's tones), H. P. G. Brooke; Anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works" (J. Barnby); Hymn before sermon, "Great giver of all good" (Alleluia perenne); Hymn after sermon, "O Lord of heaven" (Wimbledon); Recessional Hymn, "Hark! hark my soul" (Pilgrims). The service was well rendered, the Psalms being given with great expression. Mr. Barnby's anthem was finely sung by the choir. The choir-master is deserving of the greatest praise for the manner in which the musical service was rendered. The Rev. Walter Money, B.A., intoned the service throughout. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Conybeare, M.A. Mr. H. P. G. Brooke's concluding voluntaries were the "Festal March" (Sir G. Elvey), Batiste's "Offertoire in A," and "The Silver Trumpets" (arranged by Dr. Rimbault).

Whittlesey, Cambs.—A new organ, built by Messrs. Conacher, of Huddersfield, to the specification of Mr. A. Thacker, organist of Thorney Abbey, for the Church of St. Mary, was opened on Thursday, the 26th August. Full Choral Services were held morning and evening; the Lord Bishop of Ely preached in the morning, and Canon Hopkins in the evening. Mr. Thacker presided at both services, and in the afternoon he gave an organ Recital to a large congregation. The organ contains 27 stops, and is of a very fine quality of tone.

Wrangthorn.—The new organ at St. Augustine's Church was opened on the 27th August with a service of evensong. Dr. Bridge, of Manchester Cathedral, the newly-appointed organist of Westminster Abbey, presided at the organ, and accompanied throughout. Before service an Andante in G, by Mozart, was played as a voluntary. The service was choral; the psalms of the day were sung to double Anglicans, and the Canticles were the Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur set by Hopkins. After the psalms Dr. Bridge played an Adagio by Merkel. The Anthem was "Awake, awake," by Dr. Stainer. At the close of the service there was a collection, and Dr. Bridge exhibited the beauties of the organ by giving an excellent selection of pieces. The instrument, built by Messrs. Bevington & Sons, is in every respect an admirable one. After the Recital the choir sang the "Hallelujah" from the Messiah.

York.—The Twenty-second Annual Meeting of the Amateur Musical Society was held in the School-room, St. Andrewgate, on Monday evening, the 6th ult. Mr. William Upton, in the absence of the president, occupied the chair. Mr. John Thorpe (Hon. Sec.) read the report, which showed that the weekly practices during the past session, under the able conductorship of Mr. Charles Duffill, had been exceedingly well attended, and that considerable executive progress had been made. The finances of the Society were also shown to be in a satisfactory condition. The whole of the retiring officers were unanimously re-elected; and after a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting terminated.

WOULD YOU GAIN A MAIDEN'S HEART. Madrigal. By ROBERT SLOMAN, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

"To write a good madrigal is no easy task. In addition to genius and feeling, it demands a large amount of musical scholarship; and so perfect are the models of this class of composition—the Italian and English madrigals of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the Augustan age of pure vocal harmony—that the production of a madrigal like those of Marenzio or Wilbye, has been said to be as arduous as an attempt to rival a statue of Praxiteles or Phidias. . . . Dr. Sloman's music has a relish of the olden time. The separate parts are exceedingly melodious, and the effect produced by their combination is full and rich, while there is not a speck upon the transparent clearness of the harmony. Altogether this is a charming madrigal, and does honour to its author."—The Press and St. James's Chronicle.

"At the present time there are many families who have musical meetings at home once or twice during the month, and to these we recommend this charming madrigal."—The Ladies' Treasury.

* If these are the kind of songs Mr. Allchin always writes, he may go on writing as long as he likes—the longer the better. We welcome a song composer who does not write down to a common-place level for the sake of gain, but does his very best for himself as an artist, and for his art. We need not enter into particulars with regard to the works before us. Let our readers procure them, and find we say true in stating that they are of a high order, full of poetic feeling, and distinguished by no mean technical skill."—Musical World.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

CARL MARIA VON WEBER.

By F. Weber.

(Conclusion.)

The attitude of supreme indifference on the part of the Italian maestros resident in Germany with regard to the language and character of her people, necessarily resulted in their total inability to understand the bearings of the national movement inaugurated by Weber's Freischütz. In order to point out more clearly the views entertained by that party concerning the latter work and German opera in general, we cannot do better than quote a few passages from a letter written to a friend in 1821 (the year of the first production of Freischütz), by an eminent Italian (Carpani) residing in Vienna, and published in December of the same year in the Biblioteca Italiana. The writer says: "We have here (Vienna) an exceedingly romantic opera (opera romanticissima) with a more than romantic music by a certain Wöber (sic), which has a full house every time it is produced. I have not yet been able to hear it myself, but I know that it contains some pearls smothered in the scientific sand of counterpoint, and, besides, some few pretty choruses; for science is never wanting in the Germans—on the contrary, they have an abundance of it—but order, taste and melody . . . The facility with which the public here, highly musical as it is, will almost from day to day change its taste, is a fact both remarkable and difficult of explanation. To-day they applaud an opera by Rossini, to-morrow they go into raptures over a work by Paesiello: the one full of fire and rich in accompaniment—all melody and simplicity the other. The next day they are again quite content with a Cortez, composed in French by Spontini, or with a Freischütz by Weber, both most sparingly endowed with melody, especially the latter. To be more explicit, I will tell you that I gather from the score, that with the exception of some choruses and some marches, one looks in vain for the melodious portamento song throughout the entire opera. Instead thereof, you find a scrupulous interpretation of the meaning of every single word . . . but at the same time you are struck with a profound knowledge regarding chords and modulations, and with a number of devilish bounds from one idea to another . . . We shall shortly have a German opera by Spohr. As this learned composer has lived some years in Italy, he will, no doubt, have acquired the proper taste for melody, and should he be able to unite this prerogative of Italian music with German science, we may fairly expect, notwithstanding the musically intractable German words, to be treated to a fine opera. Through the unwieldiness (indocilità) and uncouthness of the native language, as well as through the overbearing attitude which the instrumental music had assumed over the vocal, the melodious singing was at one time in danger of being driven from the country altogether. Rossini and Mercadante, however, with other Italian swans, are gradually leading back the Germans to the only true path of the art. They will revive the great days of Hasse, Täuber, Mara, &c., and it will not be long before we shall again acknowledge but one Beautiful, one School, one Music: viz., that of Durante, Piccini, Cimarosa, of Gassmann, Graun, Mozart, and so many others . . . Without the appearance of Rossini, this divine art was in danger of being drowned in the ocean of the most common-place and ever-to-be-repeated songlets, or to be lost sight of in the barren desert of abstruse harmonic complications. There can be no doubt that, by introducing once more the good style of music (il buon genere), and enriching it with new treasures, Rossini and Mercadante will save the art in Europe from decay. And if the former in his admirable works will only endeavour to check the impetuosity of his creative genius by the recognized laws of truth, and the latter continue to give us such smoothly and lucidly written operas as those are with which at this moment all Milan is enraptured; the superiority of Italian music will once more be universally acknowledged, no matter in which country it is produced. . . . " The opinions as here pronounced, with the only variation, perhaps, of the respective choice in the person of the supposed " saviour of the art," may fairly be taken as representative of the views held by the Italian party all over Germany. They show plainly how little the independent character of the works of even such German masters whom our referee allows to participate in the merit of having cultivated il buon genere, i. e., the style of music as revealed periodically from the other side of the Alps, was understood in these quarters. For even Mozart, though his operas are undoubtedly cast in an Italian mould, as his genius had been trained in an Italian school, differs nevertheless widely from his preceptors in the manifold and sustained dramatic life pervading his stage-works, and in the essentially German character of his music. The stern and wholesome reforms of Gluck, with regard to the whole structure of the musical drama, are altogether ignored by the writer of the above exposition, though the theories of the composer of Iphigenia had a devoted follower in Vienna in the person of the writer's own countryman Salieri. It is not surprising then that—notwithstanding the hostility with which the Italian party met Weber's success—the real significance of his Freischütz, which showed neither the Italian leanings of a Mozart, nor the deliberate and one-sidedly reformatory tendencies of a Gluck, but had its roots entirely in the national life of the people, should have altogether escaped their notice. Keeping in mind, however, the fact that these men represented a powerful aristocracy in matters musical all over the country, the importance of the appearance of Weber, with his democratic mission, becomes at once apparent. In his double capacity of director of an operatic establishment and creative artist, Weber had long keenly felt the subordinate position in which the German music-drama had for years been suffered to remain; a fact which had stunted its natural growth, and had contributed largely to the increasing preponderance of purely instrumental music. The mighty Beethoven himself, after having once demonstrated the wondrous effects which music of the most ideal order could produce on the stage, withdrew for ever from an unhealthy atmosphere of intrigue and unworthy competition, into the isolated regions of independent thought. Weber, on his part, was differently constituted. All his artistic aims, his whole being, centred in the stage. It was here, and here only, where he could hope to realize the dreams of his youth. Already in the merry days of his stay at Darmstadt, while yet the oracular utterances of " Papa Vogler " exercised their spell over the admiring pupil, Weber, with some friends, had formed a society, whose chief objects were to be to preserve the native art in its purity, and to labour for its due recognition in the country. Like many other creations of youthful enthusiasm, the Society soon dissolved itself into its elements. But to the principle Weber remained true throughout life; while another member, Meyerbeer, preferred to use his splendid talent in mastering and combining in his music the styles of all nations, and to become the founder of the musical sensation-drama, a monstrosity which, in spite of the consummate skill with which its incongruous elements are welded together, will certainly prove to have been adapted "for an age" only, and not "for all time." We would not in this be misunderstood. The character of art, speaking in the abstract, is no doubt cosmopolitan, and in this sense music too is of no country. Still, as we recognise a distinct individuality in the works of every great artist, so there are certain special characteristics peculiar to the nation to which he belongs, which indeed establish its position in the great republic of Arts; and in art, as well as in politics, occasions may arise when this national character must assert itself against encroachments from outside tending to obstruct its natural development. And such a period was that of which we are now treating. When Weber threw down the gauntlet as champion for specifically German music, his patriotism went hand in hand with the higher interests of that art, which is indeed of no country.

The spirit of the time, it should be remembered, considerably strengthened, and to some extent suggested, the position which our composer had taken up. The wars of liberation had only recently been fought, and the expulsion of the foreign invader from German soil, if it had left the country politically as divided as before, had at any rate kindled in the nation a feeling of spiritual unity, which was kept alive by the poetry and popular literature of the day. Weber too, though not by any means of a warlike disposition, had at least once been carried beyond his ordinary sphere by the high-going waves of a great epoch in history. His songs of "Lyre and Sword," written under the stirring influence of the events which lie between the years of 1813 and 1815, may be said to have first directed the attention of the whole country upon the small, delicate-looking man, whose simple notes could arouse so much manly enthusiasm. Here already it was the element of a noble popularity which had produced such deep effects. A few years later the country should hail in the composer of "Lyre and Sword" a new rallying point for the national consciousness, whereto it could turn from a politically unsatisfactory present. Not only had the music of Der Freischütz touched familiar chords in every German home, both in the cool and criticising North and the more enthusiastic, if more homely, people of the South: it had also raised the common language from the timid position it had hitherto occupied by the side of Italian, which had so long been considered the only linguistic basis tolerable in music. Though operas and songs had, of course, been composed in German before that time, we believe we are not going too far in asserting, that to Weber and to Schubert we must trace the now universal recognition of the value of that language for musical purposes. In his masterly treatment of it, Weber solves the difficult problem of maintaining the happy medium between rigid declamatory correctness and purely musical phrasing. The great singers of his time, moreover, bore eloquent witness to the delightful manner in which his music is adapted to the capacities of the human voice. In this he has never been surpassed. On the contrary, it would seem that in the modern opera-drama, where the human throat is fast becoming a mere instrument, the singer will have to make up his mind to the "higher development," i.e., a constant strain upon his highest notes—and will have to forego the not unreasonable luxury of having his voice treated with some consideration. How far Weber, whose influence upon modern art in various directions consisted as much in pointing out new paths as in his actually walking in them, has had a share in the reformatory ideas of Richard Wagner, it is not at present our object to determine. Certain it is, that the chief features of Wagner's earlier operatic works are to be found in Euryanthe, however much in his later phase he may have freed himself from this influence. But it appears to us that, in the elaborate modern "art-work," the grand simplicity of the Volkslied-element (which, after all, is the most immediate manifestation on record of the genius of the people, whom Wagner himself holds in such reverence) has been lost sight of. Instead of following up and enlarging upon the example so successfully set by Weber, the modern reformer, in his now so well-known theories, sets himself a task which, to be effectively carried on, would require a reconstruction and reorganisation of the whole fabric of modern society. Nevertheless we are far from denying that the ideas underlying this new movement are grand, and as such worthy of the enthusiastic support of the, as yet small, circle of its devotees. There can be no doubt that, at any rate, these men represent the party of progress in musical art, in opposition to the rest-and-be-thankful spirit prevalent among the great majority of composers of the present day; and in this capacity they may claim kinship with the genius of Carl Maria von Weber, who, as his excellent biographer remarks, always had youth and progress on his side.

Weber was a conscious tone-poet, worshipping in himself the divine faculty which he recognized. He was an artist of great cultivation, who had the power to view his own relative position in the art by the objective light of its history, who distinctly felt the links which connected him with the great masters that had gone before him. It was this, which filled his soul with the earnest desire to hold sacred the purity of his art, as it had been handed down to him. Unlike the men of the "school," he aimed at the generalisation and popularisation, in the noblest sense of these terms, of that national inheritance; and listening intently to the voice of the people as it manifested itself, now with rich humour, now with touching pathos, in the Volkslied, he succeeded in holding up to them their ideal self—a precious pearl in elaborate, yet chaste, setting. This is Weber's great artistic deed, which has firmly established him in the hearts of the German people, and which places him foremost in the ranks of truly national Tone-poets.

We are conscious of having done but imperfect justice to the picture of an artist, whose importance to the art which his genius graced, cannot be pointed out with too much force. But if these remarks have given some inducement, here and there, to a closer study of the life as well as of the works of the modest composer of Freischütz, Euryanthe, and Oberon, we feel sure the subject will render the student more than ever impressed with the truth, that music is not merely a means by which to convey vague feelings—but a living power, capable of penetrating a man's whole existence with its divine influence, and enlisting in its service the noblest aspirations both of his heart and intellect.

Whatever organists may think, there can be no doubt that a clergyman has legal power to control the playing of an organ within his own church, both before and after the service. Mr. Henry Cole, organist of St. John's Church, Yeovil, Somerset, has fully proved this fact by resisting the interference of his Vicar, the Rev. G. Wyndham, appearing in Court as defendant, and being duly condemned, with costs. Such a martyr in the cause deserves extensive sympathy; for he may be the means of saving from a similar fate many organists whose musical zeal occasionally overrides their discretion.

There appears a tacit understanding between the editor of an Art-journal and his correspondents that questions relating to the subject to which the paper is devoted should be freely asked and cheerfully answered. We have no desire to interrupt this compact, but must beg to say that when such queries are addressed to the Musical Times, it is absolutely essential that they should be of general interest. Enquiries bearing upon the art may elicit replies which will enlist the attention of the majority of our readers; but when we say that we have recently been asked the age of a celebrated pianist, whether two eminent vocalists ever sang a certain duet at the Birmingham Town Hall, and where the best music-paper is to be procured, we think we shall scarcely be accused of entering our protest before it is called for. A literary periodical may legitimately open its columns to the explanation of points of purely literary importance; but it becomes questionable whether it is bound to inform its readers as to the relative merits of the different kinds of steel-pens, or what is the exact height of Mr. Tennyson.

Advertisements from Professors who undertake to develope the voice, on a method exclusively their own, in an incredibly short space of time, are to be met with every day: respiration, enunciation, and all the essential qualifications of a first-rate vocalist are evidently easy enough to acquire, if only application is made to the right person, and this person is always one of whom nobody had previously ever heard. But in all these cases it is understood that, however clever the teacher may be, the learner has something to do himself; the master guides, and if the pupil will only work, success is guaranteed. An announcement in a morning paper, however, informs us that we have in our midst a vocal instructor, from Paris, who performs a miracle which will put all our singing professors to shame; for, after enumerating the many requisites which form a portion of his system of training, he says, "No private study is required of the pupil." Such a teacher as this can scarcely expect to have a minute to himself, for hitherto practice between the lessons has been thought so essential. Only it occurs to us that if, as he advertises, this extraordinary Professor has had "twenty years of success in France and England," it is somewhat strange that he does not name one individual whom he has taught. We know many vocalists who, by hard study, have become eminent before the public; but one who has won such a position without any study at all, if only for the sake of future students, should certainly not hide so important a fact from the world.

Every real lover of music will be anxious for the success of Mdlle. Titiens during her sojourn in the United States; but her prospects at present, according to a letter published in a morning contemporary, are by no means of the brightest. So gifted a vocalist as Mdlle. Titiens will of course be ever welcome in a concert-room; but it is on the stage that she has made her fame, and in Opera therefore should she prove her real power to an American audience. The Strakosch brothers, however, by whom she is engaged, strangely enough, intend that she shall only appear in concerts, "supported" by two tenors, a baritone, and a violinist, all of moderate ability. Madame Arabella Goddard has however latterly joined the party, and will no doubt prove a decided attraction. We understand that a new Choral Society has also made an arrangement with M. Strakosch, and as an earnest of the artistic air which will distinguish their performances, in conjunction with the great prima donna, a handbill has been issued which announces that the Elijah will be given, "with the co-operation of Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Arabella Goddard, M. Sauret (violinist), &c." Surely the Strakosch Brothers will eventually see the necessity of exhibiting the artist, for whom they have paid such high terms, to the greatest advantage.

The short season of English Opera at the Princess's Theatre, under the able direction of Carl Rosa, has successfully tested the question whether the public is prepared to support the lyrical drama sung in the language of the country. Crowded houses and enthusiastic applause have rewarded the exertions of the spirited lessee; and we have now only to hope that the repetition of the experiment announced at Drury Lane Theatre, next March, will have an equally satisfactory result. But the truth must be told, that audiences have become musically educated to a much higher standard than existed in the days when Balfe was the idol of the people; and the consequence is that the reproduction of his most popular works has only made us wonder whether these are the "English Operas," upon which the reputation of the country is founded, and which are to serve as models for the native composers who have still a name to make. But those who have carefully watched the growing power of English writers in other departments of the art, are perfectly aware that we have many around us both ready and willing to supply the stage with works of a far more exalted character than any which have been revived during the few weeks' season at the Princess's. Whilst thanking Carl Rosa, therefore, for giving us an opportunity of hearing the English Opera of the past, we sincerely trust that in his next campaign he will gratify us by presenting some of the best specimens of the English Opera of the future.

We are glad to find that the directors of the Alexandra Palace have at length awakened to the fact that the day has gone by when music can be trifled with. If it be desired to devote a popular place of resort to promenades, horse-racing, and fireworks, not a word need be said against such an experiment, for success is the most decisive answer to the severest criticism; but if concerts are to form a portion of the attractions, there can be no doubt that, even as a commercial speculation, it is necessary that they should appeal to those who love the art for its own sake. The prospectus now issued by the above-named institution proves that high-class music is to have a prominent place in the programme for the winter season. Saturday Popular Concerts are to be given up to the 18th December, and to be resumed at the end of January, the list of composers represented at these performances being in the highest degree satisfactory. So praiseworthy an undertaking deserves every encouragement; and, although the well-known Sydenham concerts take place on the same days, we are confident in the belief that both establishments will receive that support which they so legitimately seek.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Saturday Concerts, which commenced on the 2nd ult, as usual, attracted a large audience, but the programme contained no novelty. Herr Wilhelmj's violin playing was however a notable feature in the selection, although Paganini's Concerto, upon which he exercised his talents, could only be considered as a vehicle for display. At the second concert Mdlle. Anna Mehlig's rendering of the first of Chopin's pianoforte Concertos, almost made us sympathise with music which, under less experienced hands, would appeal but feebly to those familiar with the Concertos of the great masters. Mr. W. G. Cusins's new Overture to Shakspeare's "Love's Labour's Lost" is well written and effectively instrumented, the mind of the trained musician being evidenced throughout. The production of Bach's fine sacred Cantata, "God's time is the best," at the third concert, created an impression which convinces us that the appreciation of this composer's works is steadily on the increase in this country. We scarcely can describe the effect of the sublime choral movements upon the vast audience assembled; and can only hope that, should any of our Three Choir Festivals be left to us, this Cantata may shortly find a place in its legitimate home—a Cathedral. The solo parts were entrusted to Miss Gill, Mr. H. Guy and Mr. Whitney. The two gentlemen are well known, but Miss Gill, who has yet a name to make, fully earned her right to the warmest encouragement. We have a distinct recollection of this young lady's appearance some time ago at Exeter Hall, where she sang a somewhat trying recitative so well as to win a burst of enthusiastic applause, and have often wondered why we have not since heard of her. If her present effort at the Crystal Palace may be accepted as an earnest of her desire to take rank as an oratorio singer, we confidently predict her success, for she has a really good contralto voice, and sings with genuine and unaffected expression.

The Harvest Festival, which took place on Wednesday, the 20th ult., was, apart from its other attractions, of the highest musical interest. The Introduction and Allegro of Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," in which the well-known Chorale, "Ein' feste Burg" is introduced, were well given by the orchestra, the powers of which were also admirably displayed in the March from "Athalie." The overwhelming effect of the choir, numbering upwards of 2,000 singers, in the above-named chorale (sung to the hymn, "Rejoice to-day with one accord"), Sir G. Elvey's Hymn, "Come, ye thankful people, come," "Now thank we all our God," and the "Old Hundredth," will not be easily forgotten, especially as these four pieces enlisted, by special request, the co-operation of as many of the audience as cared to avail themselves of this privilege. Sir John Goss's Anthem, "I will magnify," and the well-known Harvest Anthem, "O Lord, how manifold," by Mr. Barnby (who conducted both with his accustomed ability and decision), were excellently rendered; and in this part of the programme, which was exclusively devoted to sacred music, Madame Blanche Cole gave with much truth of expression, "With verdure clad;" and Mr. Coward played a movement from Handel's fourth Organ Concerto.

The second part comprised "All among the barley," which was re-demanded, the Trio and Chorus, "Thus nature, ever kind," from Haydn's "Seasons," the "Vintage Song," from Mendelssohn's "Loreley," and the opening Chorus from Handel's "Acis and Galatea," "Oh! the pleasures of the plains." The orchestra performed the Overture to Suppé's "Poet and Peasant," and the March in Gounod's "Reine de Saba." "God bless the Prince of Wales" and the National Anthem produced their usual effect; and Mr. Wilford Morgan and Mr. Wadmore's solos were received by those who heard them with the warmest applause. The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards rendered efficient assistance in the orchestra. The Palace was most appropriately decorated for the occasion, and the entertainment was so thoroughly successful as to justify its repetition the following week.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Nothing bearing even the semblance of novelty has been given at this establishment since our last notice, Cherubini's "Les Deux Journées" (under the title of "The Water Carrier") being produced too late for any mention of its performance in our present number. In the "Siege of Rochelle" we had a good opportunity of rehearing a work which laid the foundation of Balfe's fame; and as we have lately erected a statue to his memory, we doubt whether it would not have been kinder to allow his operas that peaceful slumber which—after duly fulfilling their mission—they have so legitimately earned. But, apart from any such consideration, Mr. Santley's singing of the music of Michel was really worth listening to, if only as a lesson in vocalisation, his execution of the once celebrated ballad, "When I beheld the anchor weighed," especially, being a rare specimen of purity of style and genuine expression. Of Mr. Bates, who attempted the part of the Marquis de Valmour, we are glad to be absolved from writing any elaborate criticism, as he did not repeat the experiment when the opera was again acted; but we cannot help feeling sorrow that the lessee (who certainly knows good from bad) should have placed his stage at the disposal of so utterly incompetent a débutant. Miss Julia Gaylord was excellent as Marcella, eliciting a solid encore for the song "One little kiss," and Mdlle. Torriani sang the not very genial music allotted to her with good effect. Wallace's "Maritana," and Flotow's "Martha" have also been produced, the former work affording Miss Rose Hersee an opportunity of displaying her best qualities, both as a singer and an actress, in the character of the heroine. Both operas have been well received by large audiences. The theatre was announced to close on the 30th ult.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed recommenced their attractive entertainment on the 4th ult. In addition to the excellent pieces "Eyes and No Eyes," and the "Tale of Old China," Mr. Corney Grain introduced a new musical sketch called "Clever People," which was admirably rendered and highly effective.

Dr. Stainer, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, has unfortunately met with an accident which might have been attended with serious consequences. Whilst staying with his friend Sir Frederick Ouseley, he was playing at "Fives," when a ball struck one of his eyes with such severity that the sight of it was for some time totally lost. He is now, however, although compelled to suspend professional duties for a brief period, gradually recovering, and there is every hope that he will regain the sight of the injured eye.

A severe accident has happened to M. Gounod, in Paris, during the past month. It appears that on leaving the house of his friend M. Oscar Commettant, where he had been to fetch some of his manuscripts, which had been sent from England, his foot slipped on the staircase, and he fell heavily. It is said that he has fractured his right shoulder; and, although progressing favourably, the medical men in attendance rigidly enjoin perfect quiet for some time.

We are informed that the following Professors have accepted Mr. Willert Beale's invitation to join the Council of Musicians for the forthcoming series of National Music Meetings, to be held in the provinces:—The Rev. Sir Frederick Gore Ouseley, Bart., Sir Julius Benedict, Sir George Elvey, Sir John Goss, Sir R. P. Stewart, Prof. Macfarren, Dr. Stainer, Dr. Verrinder, Dr. Steggall, Dr. Wylde, Signor Arditi, Signor Randegger, Signor Schira, Messrs. Owain Alaw, John Barnett, F. Berger, William Carter, W. G. Cusins, W. Ganz, J. L. Hatton, E. J. Hopkins, F. B. Jewson, F. Lablache, E. Land, Mallandaine, G. A. Osborne, Joseph Proudman, Brinley Richards, Carl Rosa, Charles Salaman, C. Santley, C. E. Stephens, Tamplini, and others.

A highly successful evening Concert was given at the Birkbeck Institution, under the direction of Mr. Stedman, on the 13th ult., the principal artists being Miss Annie Sinclair, Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale, Herr Pollitzer (violin), Herr Willem Coenen (pianoforte), and Mr. David Beardwell, accompanist. A decided feature in the programme was the performance of Osborne and De Beriot's violin and pianoforte duet on "Guillaume Tell," by Herr Pollitzer and Herr Willem Coenen; and solos on the violin and pianoforte, excellently played by Herr Pollitzer and Herr Coenen respectively, were warmly received. The vocal solos were varied and well chosen, and the concert afforded the utmost satisfaction to a crowded audience.

The new Organ, presented by the Grocers' Company to All-Hallows Church, Bromley-le-Bow, and built by Mr. Holdich at a cost of £500, was opened on Tuesday, the 12th ult., when a sermon was preached by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop. Several members of the Court of Assistants were present, including O. E. Coope, Esq., M.P. for Middlesex; the Revs. J. Mathews, the Rector, W. Gumby, and S. Charlesworth, Rector of Limehouse, taking parts in the service. Mr. Holdich presided at the Organ, Mr. Haynes conducting a large and well-trained choir on the occasion. A solo from the anthem, "Great is the Lord," was effectively rendered by Miss Lizzie Evans. The instrument has two manuals and more than 20 stops; the height and general character of the church materially enhancing its effect.

The new Organ recently built by Brindley and Foster, of Sheffield, for St. Saviour's Church, Brixton Hill, was opened on Wednesday, September 29th, by Mr. Shinn, Organist of Brixton Parish Church.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly Concert at the Pimlico Rooms, on the 1st ult., when the choral selection included "Sir Knight," "Here in cool grot," "The Nightingale," and "Good-night, farewell;" the solo parts in the last-named being assigned to Miss Fowler and Mr. Harvey. Miss Spear, Miss Buley, Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Amor were the other vocalists. Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith" was well rendered by Miss Julie Augarde. Mr. Garside conducted. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" will shortly be given by this Society.

The Sacred Harmonic Society has issued its prospectus for the forty-fourth season at Exeter Hall. The season will open on Friday, the 26th inst., with a performance of Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" and Mozart's "Requiem." In addition to those works annually looked for, there will be performances of Handel's "Deborah," Beethoven's "Mass in C," and "Mount of Olives," Handel's "Samson," Haydn's "Seasons" (on the anniversary of the composer's birth, March 31st), and a selection from the lesser known works of Handel and other composers. Engagements have been made or are in progress with the following principal vocalists to appear at the Society's Concerts during the season:—Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Edith Wynne, Levier, Nouver, Patey, Elton, Enriquez; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Vernon Rigby, E. Lloyd, Fabrini, Cummings, Guy, Lewis Thomas, Wadmore and Foli. Sir Michael Costa will conduct the performances, as usual, and Mr. Willing presides at the Organ.

The annual general meeting of the Aldermanbury Musical Society took place on Monday evening, the 4th ult., in one of the saloons of the Oriental-buildings, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars. In the absence of the President of the Society (Rev. C. C. Collins, M.A.), the chair was occupied by Mr. J. Maxwell, who said the committee, encouraged by the great success attending the past season, intended to introduce such improvements as would place the Society upon a basis equal to that of any similar Association in London. They hoped to make the Oriental-buildings their permanent musical abode, but to do that it would be necessary to increase the number of members to 300. There were at present 128 members, and 25 honorary members. Mr. Edward Craig was unanimously re-elected musical director, and Mr. Arthur T. B. Markham, secretary. A number of amendments and additions to the rules were proposed by Messrs. East, Salisbury, Clowes, &c., and adopted; and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the first portion of the evening's proceedings. Afterwards a programme of vocal and instrumental music was given by Messrs. East, Salisbury, Herr Lehmeyer, Miss Easterbrook, &c.

A series of operatic performances in English, under the direction of Carl Rosa, is announced to take place at Drury Lane Theatre in March next; and we are also informed that later in the year, at the same establishment, Mr. Chatterton intends to give German operas. We sincerely trust that both these experiments may prove successful in an artistic as well as in a pecuniary sense.

The Saturday evening Organ Recitals at the Bow and Bromley Institute continue to be attended by large and appreciative audiences. At the performance on the 9th ult., Dr. Spark, of Leeds, chose an excellent programme of classical music, comprising Bach's Introduction and Fugue in C minor, Henry Smart's Evening Prayer and Allegro in D major, and Guilmant's Fantasia on "Home, sweet Home," and "Rule Britannia," all of which were admirably rendered and received with the warmest marks of approbation. A Duet for violin and organ by Dr. Julius Rietz (in which Herr Louis Ries performed the violin part) was so well played as to be enthusiastically redemanded. Mr. Frederic Archer and Mr. E. H. Thorne have also given Recitals at this Institution during the past month with unqualified success.

A Harvest Festival was celebrated at Christ Church, Clapham, on Thursday, the 14th ult. Mozart's 1st Mass, adapted to the English Communion Service, was given in the morning, the Benedictus, Sanctus, and Agnus Dei being taken from Mr. W. S. Hoyte's Service in D. At Evensong the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were by Tuckerman, and Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion" was given as the anthem. After the blessing, Mendelssohn's Te Deum was sung, and concluded a most successful festival. At the latter service the organist and choirmaster of the Church, Mr. Richard Lemaire, conducted; and Mr. W. S. Hoyte presided at the organ.

The usual Harvest Thanksgiving Festival at S. Philip's Church, Earls Court, Kensington, took place on Sunday, the 24th ult. The service, a full choral one, was rendered by a large choir in a manner which reflects great credit upon the organist and choirmaster, Mr. M. R. Lochner. The music included Benedicite, M. R. Lochner; Jubilate in F, Dr. Garrett; Anthem, "Fear not, O Land," Sir J. Goss; Introit, "Thou visiteth the Earth," Dr. Greene; Creed, Merbecke; Offertory Anthem, "He that soweth," Mozart; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A, Dr. Stainer; Anthem, "Praise the Lord," Dr. Hayes; Anthem after sermon, "In the beginning," "The Heavens are telling," Haydn.

The Harvest Festival at S. Augustine's, Kilburn, took place on Sunday, the 17th ult. At the High Celebration Redhead's Mass in F was used, Barnby's Anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," being the Introit, and Goss's "O Saviour of the world," the Eucharist Hymn. At Evensong Tallis was used throughout, and Farebrother's Anthem, "O give thanks unto the Lord," was given with much effect. At the conclusion of the service Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung. Mr. W. Beavan, the organist and choirmaster, accompanied the service.

Madame Lemmens-Sherrington has been giving a series of Concerts in the provinces, the principal feature in which has been a recital of portions of Wagner's "Lohengrin." The chief incidents of the opera have been presented, and though the work depends for success so much on scenic and other accessories, the selection appears to have been received with much favour by large audiences in the various towns included in the tour. Madame Lemmens-

Sherrington has been assisted in the interpretation by Miss Jessie Jones (soprano), Miss Dones (contralto), Mr. Bernard Lane (tenor), Mr. R. Hilton (bass), Miss Emma Barnett (pianoforte), and Chevalier Lemmens (Mustel organ).

Beethoven's Sonatas, for the Pianoforte. Composed by L. Van Beethoven; 8vo. edition. Edited and fingered by Agnes Zimmermann.

Literature is now becoming so cheap that it will shortly be a reproach for a man not to possess the best-known works of the best-known authors in some edition, however humble it may be. Should music ever become equally a necessity, there can be no doubt that Beethoven's Sonatas must form a portion of even the smallest collection of classical works. But the placing of these gems of art on a level with the household books so essential in a library must necessarily be a work of time, for many music-lovers can remember the day when a Sonata of Beethoven's was too costly to become popular; and even now, although many cheap copies of these works are to be obtained, they are generally so small, and the notes, in consequence, so crowded together that it is difficult for the eye to recognise with sufficient accuracy the complicated phrasing of the music. When Miss Zimmermann's edition of the Sonatas was first published, we drew attention not only to the accuracy of the text, but to the excellence of the engraving; yet the volume was, to a certain extent, a luxurious one, and more adapted, therefore, for the drawing-room than the study. The present issue, in octavo form, is in every respect an exact reproduction of the former one, elegantly bound to correspond with the many similar editions of composers' works published by the same firm, and of a convenient size to be carried whenever required. We confidently predict for this "people's edition" an extensive and rapid sale.

The Passion of Our Lord (Der Tod Jesu). Set to music by C. H. Graun.

There is too much tendency among the English musical public to accept only those works which bear the stamp of genius; and it is only natural that, with a total absence of technical knowledge, amateurs should fail to appreciate that which makes an idea worth having, i.e., its regular and scientific expression. The great men who form a school or mark an epoch in art, are accepted by all, but it is reserved for the more earnest students to appreciate as they deserve, the less gifted, but often no less worthy persons, of whom it may be said, as has been said of Carl Heinrich Graun, "Intense spirituality as well as deep pathos were not in his nature; nor has he made any pretensions to these great gifts, or sought to display them in his compositions." We may nevertheless "consider the 'Death of Jesus' as a composition of genuine piety and worthy of remembrance—one which, though of not the highest originality, is yet deservedly popular, and, on the whole, of noble and dignified proportions." Those who have already become familiar with other settings of the same subject by an unrivalled master, must remember, in their enthusiasm for his work, to be patient with a newcomer, whose excellence, apart from intrinsic merit, is guaranteed by many years of popular approval in Germany. Above all, let them avoid making any comparison where none is in truth possible, and endeavour, when the time comes, as it doubtless will, to give an impartial hearing to a composition, which, if not the work of genius, is the evident outcome of patient love and labour.

As for the general plan adopted, we may observe that the dramatic personal element is entirely absent, while the aim of the composer seems to be directed towards inspiring meditation on what is past, without endeavouring to bring it vividly before us. Thus each solo voice narrates the story in its turn, and the speeches of the Saviour are no more characterised by peculiar expression than those of any other character, although the recitative certainly halts, and the music is more rhythmicalwhen such passages occur. It may indeed be fairly argued that this conception of so sublime a subject is more noble through its greater abstraction; while it is indeed more difficult of realisation by reason of the limitations that are placed upon the composer. The listener, however, who has become intimate with a more dramatic treatment of the text, must be prepared to meet with less variety and fewer situations of thrilling interest, for the lack of which the shortness of the work will compensate, in considering how far his attention may be sustained. If those who are drawn by any means towards a hearing of this, the most celebrated production of a learned and honoured musician, will bear in mind these features in its construction, its high aim and the internal evidence of the devotion and artistry displayed by its author, they will not fail to benefit their intelligence, even if their emotional faculties are not aroused.

To speak generally of the music, the airs are undoubtedly long, all of them having a second part and da capo. We can scarcely, however, approve the direction that is appended to many of them to the effect that, if found too lengthy, we may omit the repetition of the first part, and finish with a few bars bringing us back to the original key. It is obvious that the only possible resting place in a Scherzo, is the end of the Scherzo; if we wish to omit only a portion, we must sacrifice a trio; but to play both, and instead of returning to the Scherzo, to tack on, as it were, a few bars of matter in the original key of the movement, is certainly but a clumsy show of adherence to the laws of tonality. If these songs are felt to be too much extended, and a cut is thought desirable, let the performance conclude with the principal movement (i.e., the first portion), which like any piece, vocal or instrumental, of the same form, is as a rule complete in itself. Of the choruses, which are both reflective and descriptive, the first, "His spirit is faint," and the last, "Behold us here, repentant sinners," are not only in themselves masterly and deeply earnest compositions, but will be found singularly well fitted to form the opening and termination of the work, the former at once arresting the attention and fixing the hearer's thoughts upon the awful subject of his meditation, the latter calmly but sorrowfully expressing the mixed feelings of penitence and gratitude which are the natural outcome of an earnest Christianity. The chorals which occur at intervals, with their simple four-part writing, will in many cases be recognised, especially the one with which the work commences. Of the rest No. 17, "Lament and weep," consists of three verses of a hymn, each of which is sung by a different combination of voices and followed by an episode in the tonic major given to a bass, both music and words of which form an excellent contrast to the choral, and make with it an interesting movement. As a matter of course there are learned specimens of fugal writing, the most important of which is the chorus No. 10, "Christ unto us hath left an example." In spite, however, of the authority of Albrechtsberger and other masters of contrapuntal science, we shall always protest against the use of the first inversion of a suspended fourth, even when approached in the least objectionable manner, as in two instances in this chorus.

The Rev. J. Troutbeck has performed his duties of translation and adaptation on the whole successfully; in some cases, especially in the Recitatives, with more than mere care. We suppose that the expression, "O Thou that wept," is an oversight, possibly a misprint, or are we to confess our ignorance of some exception to the rules which govern the inflection of verbs? In conclusion we may hope that this valuable addition to the "Octavo Edition" may be soon heard in London, if not in the concert-room, at least in the churches whose choirs have become celebrated through the performance of similar works during fitting seasons. We may confidently say that none which have yet been thus heard are more suitable for the purpose, either in duration of performance or solemnity of character, than the "Der Tod Jesu," of Carl Heinrich Graun.

Advent Hymn. By Robert Schumann.

One of the greatest difficulties musicians have to deal with in the setting of words is, how to obtain in their music a corresponding continuity, while conforming to the exigencies of the rules of construction their art demands. With a composition of one movement this does not often occur, but in the setting of a long poem, or a short one whose passages will bear repetition and consequent amplification of their musical counterpart, it is almost impossible, and it has seldom been attempted to obtain pauses which may be exactly commensurate with the sense of the text. In his treatment of the Advent Hymn of Rückert, Schumann has gone as far as is possible in this direction. Although the poem may, generally speaking, be divided into two portions, the first containing the announcement of the Advent, and indicating the seemliness of praise and thankfulness for it, the latter enjoining prayer and the hope of a spiritual renewal of the event, there is no place where, without a sacrifice of the poet's meaning, a full close is possible. It has been a reproach against some that with them, words are a mere vehicle of sound. Others more recently have sacrificed musical science in the interest of poetical requirements; but nowhere could a more excellent example of an earnest desire to avoid both extremities be found than in the work before us. The result proves that the composer was gifted with a share of that versatility in intellectual pursuits which is so conspicuous a quality of many of the early painters, whose excellence in one particular subject was enriched and amplified by a general acquaintance with many others.

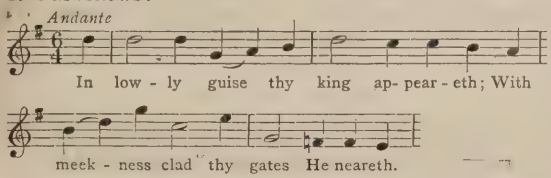
The "Cantata for Chorus and Orchestra" was composed at the end of the year 1848, immediately before the music to Byron's Manfred. It was first performed in December, 1849, at a concert given in the Leipzig Gewandhaus. We have already spoken of the thoughtfulness which is observable in the general plan, and it now remains to describe shortly the details of the work, the division of which into numbers hardly makes the design clear. The opening movement really consists of the two first numbers. Six lines of the poem, announcing the actual advent of Christ upon the patient ass's colt, are set to a broad melodious phrase in G major, sung by a soprano with chorus of female voices, the commencement of which may be called the pervading idea of the whole, as it re-appears several times. It is as follows:—



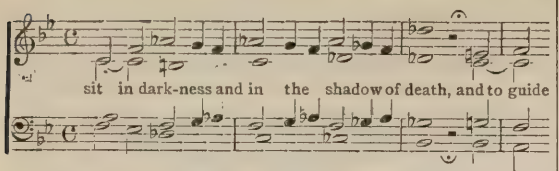
Then occurs an episode in E major, the words of which describe Christ as the all-powerful King, who rules by peace, and conquers without battle. On the return to the original key the phrase above quoted (which in future we will call the principal theme) is taken as the subject of a fugue, thus securing variety at the same time as the requirements of form are satisfied. After a half-close on the dominant, there follows a soprano solo, with chorus of female voices in B♭, to words describing Christ's power over a world which stands in awe of Him, and His intention of destroying by His advent the horrors of sin and death. The music is of the elevated character of, and, indeed, is quite comparable with, some portions of the third part of Faust, the most ideal and romantic of all Schumann's works. The peaceful conclusion of the number is interrupted by a choral to the text which commences what we have already described as the second part of the poem. An episode of a quasi-fugal character is interspersed to the words "O come to us once more, and calm our troubled life." The two next numbers, which follow without any pause, and which are inseparably connected by an affinity in the music, consist of phrases treated in imitation, and set to three lines of the poem, declaring that there is need of another Advent to renew the grace against which the world rebels. At the close of this portion a beautiful effect is obtained by the introduction, in the key of G minor, of the "principal theme," to the words, "O may Thy light with us be dwelling," sung by four solo voices, and answered by the chorus. A somewhat abrupt modulation brings us to the last movement in G major. Several points of imitation occur successively, and the whole concludes with a coda (più allegro), wherein is introduced again the principal theme, sung in turn by the basses, altos, and tenors, while solo voices echo a new counterpoint, giving fresh impulse to the prayer, "that all may live as brethren true and holy, made one within their Father's home."

The shortness of this work, the absence of difficulty in its performance, and its opportune publication in the octavo edition at the present time, lead us to hope that we may possibly hear it performed at least in one of the beforementioned churches whose choirs have been foremost in proving that music, apart from its own worth, is a never-failing handmaid of religion.

The Rev. J. Troutbeck has evidently devoted his best energies to the difficult task of translating into English the original poem of Rückert, and if there are some conventional or unskilful expressions, there is much that shows his keen sympathy with the text.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office of the Holy Communion, set to music in the Key of B flat, by J. Baptiste Calkin.

It seems to have been received as an acknowledged rule by the highest authority, that to obtain a necessary variety, it is permissible to include under one leading and general fact of tonality the several kindred ramifications which, in their relation to the chosen principal key, are like the tributaries of the main stream. No one would nowadays think of writing a symphony or a sonata with four movements in the key of C, nor would such a one any more hesitate to call a quartet with a first and last movement in G, one in D, and one in B major, a quartet in G. But the same, if he were an English musician writing Church music, would probably think himself bound to write every portion of a service in G major, distinctly in that key. This has always appeared to us illogical, and likely to detract from the worth of an otherwise well-considered and carefully written work of that class; and though in a short piece the want of contrast would probably not be felt, it militates much against the scientific excellence and pleasurable result of an extended composition such as the one we are now considering, especially as the pauses between each movement of the various divisions of Morning, Evening, and Communion Service, are not long, while the music of all is necessarily somewhat similar. Such is, however, the traditional method observed amongst us, nor does it seem likely that a change will for the present become general. We can only wonder how one man can write fourteen consecutive movements in one key, considering the difficulty of finding so many new ideas in the same region of sound, and with so little variety in the matter which suggests them. Mr. Calkin certainly deserves great praise for having, with the faithful observance of a tradition, obtained, at least in some degree, the very excellence which seems incompatible with it. Of his service in B flat, the Te Deum, Jubilate, Kyrie Eleison (1 and 2), Credo, Offertory, Sanctus, Gloria in Excelsis, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, are already familiar to many choirs and congregations. He has now added the Benedictus, Introit, Responses before and after the Gospel, and the Sursum Corda. The Introit, "O send out Thy light and Thy truth," has afforded Mr. Calkin an opportunity of writing a movement in a somewhat freer style which bids fair to rival the deserved popularity of the offertory piece "Whoso hath this world's goods." The Benedictus is set to music even broader and more harmonious than that previously composed for the other canticles. We notice the same thoughtful endeavours to give symmetry by the recurrence of principal themes, and their varied treatment, besides continued indications of the author's experience in vocal writing. From the numerous examples of interesting harmonic progressions occurring in fitting accord with the sense of the text, we may mention the modulation into the key of the minor supertonic to the words, "To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death."



The effect of this, sung by the four voices without accompaniment, is enhanced by the contrasting tranquillity of the succeeding phrase, which is admirably in keeping with the sense of the concluding portion of the verse, "And to guide our feet into the way of peace."

A Morning, Communion and Evening Service in F. Composed by S. Parkman Tuckerman.

We learn from the preface that two numbers of this Service, with the Kyrie and Sanctus, were published in 1860, "and as the work has been favourably received, and is, to some extent, in use in the cathedrals and parish churches, the author has ventured to add the Office for the Holy Communion, as well as the Evening Canticles, in the hope the Service, in a complete form, will be more acceptable." We are also told that some alterations have been made in the new edition. Certainly Mr. Tuckerman, while preserving a general similarity in the main features of the new portion, has shown signs of a more advanced experience, both in the requirements of the organ and vocal writing.

A Festival Setting for the Office of the Holy Communion, composed expressly for the Dedication Festival at All Saints, Margaret Street, London: on All Saints Day, A.D. 1875. By W. S. Hoyte.

The progress and development of the High Church party in the Church of England has necessitated the rise of a new school of Ecclesiastical Music. Hitherto they have been content with the Masses of Haydn and Mozart, and whether they are insufficient or not for the purpose, we cannot wonder if there is a demand for new works on the same model, and designed to fit in with the various prominent features and, so to speak, "situations" of a service which is even denominated "The Mass" by its most advanced votaries. We believe that Mr. Hoyte is among the first to produce a work of this class. The service before us corresponds exactly in form with that adopted by musicians who have written for the Roman Catholic Church; so clear indeed is the intention of the composer to follow in their wake, that he, without disguise, gives the Latin name to each movement and we find the service includes the Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Et Incarnatus, Et Resurrexit, Sanctus, Benedictus and Agnus Dei, the only difference being that the Gloria comes at the end of the English Service, while the sentences of the preface, and the responses before and after the Gospel, are here set to original music.

Mr. Hoyte has nevertheless for the most part given a totally different character to his music, which is distinctly Anglican. He has succeeded best in the episodical movements, such as the Et Incarnatus and Benedictus, which, by the novelty of their arrangement, have naturally inspired a freer style. They are both most impressive and pleasing movements. We may add that the work is scored for an orchestra, although the present edition contains only the organ score.

Moore's Irish Melodies; with new symphonies and accompaniments for the Pianoforte by M. W. Balfe. 8vo. edition.

A Selection of Moore's Irish Melodies; arranged for two voices, by M. W. Balfe. 8vo. edition.

In the preface to the original folio edition of this collection of Moore's Irish Melodies, we are thus apprised of the reason for their publication. "It is now universally acknowledged that the symphonies and accompaniments of Sir John Stevenson are by no means irreproachable in a merely technical sense; nor do they exhibit that appropriate national colouring for which they have so long enjoyed the credit." To remedy this defect we can scarcely imagine that any artist could have been selected more thoroughly capable than Mr. Balfe, who was himself an Irishman, and a warm lover of the genuine music of his native country. When therefore in 1859 he submitted to the public the result of his labours in the edition already referred to, there can be no doubt that the volume would have had a rapid sale could the public have been as convinced as the editor of the unsympathetic nature of Sir John Stevenson's share in the presentation of these beautiful lyrics to the world; but, good or bad, his symphonies and accompaniments had already won universal acceptation; and Moore himself (although totally unfitted to give a musical opinion on the matter) had fully recorded his conviction of the excellent manner in which his friend Sir John Stevenson had performed his task. Time, however, has amply endorsed the truth of Mr. Balfe's words; and few persons who now sing "Moore's Melodies" can endure the lumbering and uncongenial pianoforte part of the learned knight, whose music, apart from its want of any national character, is not by any means remarkable for grammatical accuracy. Turning then to the Melodies as treated by Mr. Balfe, we find the work of a tender and loving hand throughout: the harmonies are natural, the symphonies just such as will appropriately introduce the airs, and the accompaniments well adapted to help the voices, without intruding beyond their legitimate province. These qualities are perhaps more especially observable in such popular melodies as "Rich and rare were the gems she wore," "Believe me, if all those endearing young charms," "Fly not yet," "Love's young dream," "'Tis the last rose of Summer," and "The meeting of the waters," as if the arranger were fearful of drawing the listener's attention rather to the skill of the workman than to his reverence for the work. The octavo edition now before us will enable all lovers of these national airs to possess themselves of a volume which must satisfy both the musician and the amateur, at an exceedingly moderate outlay. The music is remarkably clear, and the handsome binding gives a most attractive appearance to the book. The selection arranged for two voices includes all the best-known melodies, and may be recommended with confidence for drawing-room concerts. "The meeting of the waters," "The young May moon," "Has sorrow thy young days shaded?" "When cold in the earth," and "Wreath the bowl," strike us as being particularly effective.

History of Music from the Christian Era to the Present Time, in the form of Lectures (designed for the use of students, &c.). By Frederic Louis Ritter, Professor of Music at Vassar College.

We have had so many books lately by amateurs telling us what we ought to think of the great composers of the world, that it is quite refreshing to find the subject treated by a "Professor," and more especially by one who, instead of wedding himself to the past, present, or future of music, is content to study its various phases of development, and to present a reliable guide to those students who, as he says, "feel the desire, the want, of a deeper and more general knowledge of, and information as to, the growth and progress of their art than is common." That this intention has been successfully carried out in the present volume we can conscientiously affirm: those who seek for elaborated lives of the great musicians will be disappointed, but all who wish to mature their judgment by acquainting themselves with the history, and what may be termed the philosophy, of the art cannot fail to derive both pleasure and profit from the result of Professor Ritter's labours. In the Introduction, the author dedicates his work to "the young artists of America," and before commencing his lectures, gives some excellent advice to the aspiring student. "Read," he says, "the reliable biographies of eminent composers; study their own utterances about their art,—how they clung to their adopted good principles. Before giving way to pecuniary inducements, they first satisfied their duty as artists. How is it in this respect with our young students? Scarcely yet able to write a succession of common chords with grammatical correctness, they already besiege the publisher. They have neither time nor perseverance to go through the necessary preliminary, earnest studies. They are all geniuses (much abused title!), and geniuses do not need, they think, to study."

The early history of music is exceedingly well treated, and much interesting information is given respecting the gradual rise of the "Oratorio." When the Mystery and Miracle plays passed from the hands of the priests and monks into those of the people, we are told, for instance, that "instead of sacred hymns, impudent street-songs resounded before the altar of the Church; and the most important person in the Miracle plays was the devil. He was very popular with our forefathers. They dressed him up in the most fantastic, extravagant, and alarming manner. In France not less than four devils had sometimes to appear in one play. He did not yet represent the bad principle; but his parts were those of a clown, or a poor abused imbecile. He always got the worst of it." Yet when we see that many of our modern art-forms emerged from these ridiculous popular ceremonies, we learn to look with toleration upon the peculiar humour of our ancestors. Before speaking of Bach and Handel, Professor Ritter gives some very excellent remarks upon the musical culture of Protestant Germany since the Reformation; and although his observations upon the more modern composers are somewhat sketchy, it must be remembered that he professes to write rather more of principles than of persons, and aims at deducing from the works and the workers, as he says in his Introduction, "their individual importance as influencing and directing the growth of life and art." It is always interesting to see what a foreigner thinks of our own countrymen, and more particularly so when, as in the present instance, he appears by no means a biassed judge. Speaking of the English operas of Bishop, Balfe, Wallace, Barnett and Rooke, he says, "Though these composers possessed much natural facility of melodic inventiveness, a good deal of experience and knowledge of scenic and orchestral resources, their productions lack, in general, originality of form, style, and dramatic fire and expression. The operas of these composers are cleverly-put-together conglomerations of English ballads, Italianized arias, and French romances. They are consequently wanting in unity of style and colouring." This is severe perhaps; but we fear that even the composers themselves would have admitted the truth of it, for a positive style appears to have been scarcely even aimed at. We may say, however, that as a compensation for this harsh criticism, he freely admits that Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, Sullivan, and H. Smart would "with the necessary opportunity," be highly successful on the operatic stage. This "opportunity" is, we now hope, drawing nearer and nearer.

Four Sonatinas, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Gustav Wolff.

We are not sure whether the gradual increase of works moulded in the classical form is to be looked upon by those who wish well to the progress of true art as an unmixed benefit. Poets who have but little to say have often, by casting their feeble effusions into fourteen lines, passed for very tolerable sonnet writers; and in the present day indifferent composers, by producing sonatas, gavottes, sarabandes and suites, in imitation of those which the great masters have left us, constantly receive a larger share of praise than they are entitled to, not because they have done a thing well, but because they have done it at all. Thus much of preface is necessary before noticing Herr Wolff's Sonatinas, because we are inclined to doubt, carefully as they are written, and solid as is the workmanship, whether, published as independent pieces, they would have commanded much attention. The subject of the first movement of No. 1 is good; but it lacks interest as it progresses, and towards the end the passages are common-place. The "Andante," in the tonic minor, with a progression into the major, is melodious; but the last movement is trifling, although the leading theme promises well. No. 2 we like much better. The opening subject, in D major, is flowing and well harmonised, and the change into the minor is extremely effective. The "Allegro" too, though unpretentious, is a musicianlike movement, and will commend itself to young players. No. 3 has not a very attractive first movement, but the "Tarantella," in G minor, has much character; and the "Allegretto Grazioso," which is also an unmistakable dance, is vivacious, if not very tuneful. No. 4 has the best first movement, and although we care not much for the Andante, "Tempo di Marcia," the Rondo contains some excellent writing, and makes a good Finale to what we consider, on the whole, the best of the four Sonatinas. There are two or three inaccuracies which might easily be corrected, as, for instance, the omission of the sharp before the F in the "Tarantella" movement, No. 3, in the right-hand part of bar 8.

My Angel Lassie. Song. Words by Gordon Campbell.
I know my love loves me. Song. Words by Frederick Enoch.
Music by Rosetta O'Leary Vinning.

The composer of these songs still writes for musicians, and will, no doubt, reap the reward of her conscientiousness in time. "Royalty" ballads have not yet quite had their day, but vocalists are beginning to discover that the system is no longer a secret with the general public, and when, in their own defence, they find themselves compelled to rely solely upon the merits of the works they sing, artists will have a chance. The words of "My Angel Lassie" have received a thoroughly sympathetic setting. The wailing theme, in E minor, with which it opens, is wisely left with the simplest harmony, and the triplets accompanying the phrase in the tonic major give much force to the passage. We may also say that the concluding phrase, where the unexpected change into C precedes the close in E major, is so well managed as to leave no effect of incongruity of keys upon the mind of the auditor. The second song, commencing, like many of the German vocal compositions, with a rapid triplet accompaniment, is extremely well harmonised, if we except the suspended seventh (C♯) on D, in the 8th bar, to which we have not yet got reconciled. The phrase in G minor is extremely beautiful, commencing on the last bar of page 3, and the constant changes of key throughout, although bold in the extreme, are always in keeping with the varied sentiment of the poetry. We shall be glad if we can help in drawing attention to this song, which, with its companion just noticed, will materially add to the reputation of the composer.

The Human Voice; its Anatomy, Physiology, and Ailments. By C. B. Garrett, M.D.

Dr. Garrett has already worthily won his reputation by a large number of works on medical science, and having made affections of the throat and chest objects of special study, he now gives the result of his researches in a treatise which should be of the highest importance to vocal teachers. We regret that our limited space will not allow us to make any copious extracts from the book; but the author's demonstration of the fact, that "vocal vibrations would be feeble and only audible at a short distance were they not reinforced by the vibrations excited in the cartilages of the larynx, trachea, bronchial tubes and pharynx, the walls of the chest, the nasal cartilages, the teeth, and the bones of the cranium," is put in so homely a manner that we cannot resist quoting his words. He says "Open your mouth wide, put a watch in it, but so as not to touch any of the teeth—the watch-tick is not heard; now let the watch come in contact with the teeth, the tick becomes instantly audible to you, the sonorous vibrations being propagated and conveyed to the auditory nerve by the teeth and the bones of the cranium. In the same way the tuning-fork when struck and held in the air, excites a feeble and scarcely audible sound; when it touches a table or is placed between the teeth, the sound is heard over the whole room owing to the note being propagated and participated in by the entire table, and in the other instance by the bones of the skull." Of course we knew all this before, but had scarcely thought perhaps that the production of a sound by the human voice is subject to these laws. We are glad to find that Dr. Garrett advocates singing as one of the most essential promoters of a healthful state of the chest and respiratory organs; and it would be well if those who have the care of young people could be brought to see the importance of considering vocal tuition, not as an accomplishment, but as a necessity. "The exertion of singing," he says, "is a good substitute, especially in inclement weather, for other forms of exercise. Many eminent singers feel hungry only after their work. The crying of infants affords them all the advantages which are obtained by putting their muscles in activity—to them it is exercise; and thus nature supplies them with the energetic activity which their age requires before they possess powers of locomotion." The book will well repay attentive perusal.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Barnet.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in St. John's Parish Church, on Wednesday evening, September 29th, the sermon being preached by the Rev. J. Bhosé, a native missionary in British Guiana. The service was fully choral, and was intoned by Rev. J. Lee, M.A., Head-Master of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Barnet. Mr. James Whitmore presided at the organ. The choir gave an excellent rendering of Sir John Goss's Anthem, "O taste and see how gracious the Lord is." The church was very tastefully decorated by the Misses Harris.

Berkhampstead.—On Thursday, the 21st ult., a concert was given at the Town Hall by Mr. J. Macrone. Miss Matilda Scott and Mr. Stedman were the principal vocalists. The church choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Macrone, was very successful in several part-songs.

Birmingham.—An amateur concert, on behalf of the Middle Class Idiot Asylum at Knowle, organised by Mrs. Unett, of Castel Froma, Lillington, took place in the Town Hall on Tuesday, the 28th September. The concert, as a whole, was much above the average of amateur performances, and the programme embraced a work that was new to a Birmingham audience, Mr. E. Aspa's Endymion, and an excellent selection. The vocalists were—Mrs. George Unett, Miss Richardson, Miss Burman, Mr. V. Harding, Mr. Spencer, Mr. J. H. Lambert and Mr. Cook, assisted by Miss Jessie Royd and the members of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society; Mr. Stimpson, organist; Mr. E. Aspa, pianist and accompanist, and Mr. Stockley, conductor. The miscellaneous portion of the programme included Pearsall's madrigal, "I saw lovely Phillis," Webbe's part-song, "When winds breathe soft," and a Sonata by Handel, for pianoforte and violin, played by Miss Muntz and Mr. Winn with accuracy and taste.

Dartford.—Mr. Alfred Toe's concert took place on the 25th ult., when he was well supported by his numerous friends. Miss Jessie Royd and Mr. Stedman made their first appearance in Dartford, and were very warmly received. The whole of the programme gave the greatest satisfaction.

Folkestone.—September 29th being the Feast of S. Michael and All Angels, the Dedication Festival commenced at S. Michael's Church, and was continued until the Octave. Special preachers were appointed for each day. The choir was supported by an efficient orchestra of stringed and wind instruments; and the excellent rendering of the music testified to the great care bestowed on the training of the choir by the Rev. E. Husband, the incumbent-elect, who acted as conductor, and by the organists, Mr. J. M. Jones, of S. Matthias, West Brompton, and Miss H. E. Green, of S. James's Chapel, York-street, St. James's. The processional, "There is sound of rejoicing," was composed for the Festival by Mr. Husband. The selection of music was the same on each of the three principal days, and included Schubert's Creed in G, "Sanctus" and "Gloria" from Mr. Husband's Service in F, "Agnus" from Verdi's Requiem, Gounod's "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis," Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Tenor solos, "Be thou faithful" and "Lord, remember David" (well sung by Mr. Dyson), "Hallelujah," from Engedi, Berthold Tours's "Te Deum," and a composition by the Rev. E. Husband, "S. Michael's Martial Hymn." The voluntaries played by the band and organ were the Marches from Athalie and Eli, and the overture to Handel's Occasional Oratorio.

Halliwell, Bolton-le-Moors.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held in St. Luke's Church, on the 30th September. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and fruits. The musical portion of the service was rendered with great precision by the choir, which was considerably augmented from the choirs of Atherton, Deane, and neighbouring churches. The opening hymn was "Come, ye thankful people, come," (St. George); Responses and Creed (E. J. Hopkins); special Psalms, 65 and 145 (Turle in C, and Dr. Verrinder in G); Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Dr. Wesley in F); Anthem, "I was glad" (Sir Geo. Elvey); Hymn before the sermon, "We plough the fields and scatter;" Hymn after the sermon, "Praise, O praise our God and King." The service was intoned by the Rev. T. de Rome Bolton, Vicar of St. Peter's, Halliwell. The lessons were read by the Rev. C. Cronshaw, and the Rev. F. E. Waldie. The sermon was preached by the Rev. T. A. Livesey, of Manchester. The services were continued on the following Sunday, the Anthems being "O Lord how manifold are Thy works" (Barnby) and "Praise the Lord O Jerusalem" (Scott).

Leeds.—The committee of the Yorkshire Exhibition determined that the last of the "special" days should eclipse all its predecessors, and accordingly the attraction of the 22nd ult. consisted of a grand morning concert, at which Rossini's Stabat Mater was performed, followed by a miscellaneous selection. In every respect the performance was an admirable one. There was a numerous and skilled band of instrumentalists, the full chorus of the Leeds Madrigal and Motet Society, and for principal vocalists Madame Campobello-Sinico (soprano), Mdlle. Enriquez (contralto), Mr. Vernon Rigby (tenor), and Signor Campobello (bass). Dr. Spark was the conductor, and Mr. T. Wainwright organist. Mr. Vernon Rigby sang the tenor air "Cujus animam" with much feeling, and the duet "Quis est homo," by Mesdames Sinico and Enriquez, was excellently given. The single encore of the day was gained by Madame Sinico in the "Inflammatus." Mdlle. Enriquez deserved, but did not obtain, a similar compliment for her artistic rendering of the "Fac ut portem;" and Signor Campobello gave efficient assistance throughout. Of the miscellaneous selection which followed the Oratorio, the most effective pieces were the tenor air from Judas Maccabæus, "Sound an alarm," well sung by Mr. Rigby, and "Deh Vieni," from Figaro, which Madame Sinico rendered with much effect. The band was heard to advantage in the overtures to The Merry Wives of Windsor, by Nicolai, and William Tell. Dr. Spark conducted throughout in a masterly manner. In the evening a miscellaneous concert was given, the most important feature of which was the performance of the finale to Mendelssohn's fragment, Loreley, by Madame Sinico and the chorus. Mr. Vernon Rigby was encored in Shield's song, "The Thorn," when he substituted "La donna è mobile," from Rigoletto. Several other solos were given, which were all favourably received. The choir was particularly successful in "Ye banks and braes," harmonised by Macfarren; and the old madrigal, "The silver swan," both of which were given with true musicianly feeling. These admirable concerts deserve to be long remembered, not only for the successful efforts of the singers and instrumentalists, but for the excellent taste displayed in the selection of the music, which entitles them to take rank among the most important musical events of the local season.

Littlehampton.—The organ in the Parish Church of St. Mary having been rebuilt, and considerably enlarged by Mr. W. J. Haywood, of Hampstead-road, London, was opened on Tuesday, the 5th ult. There was a choral celebration at 8, morning service at 11, and evening service at 7. Mr. J. Forbes Carter, organist of the Church, presided at the organ, and at 4 o'clock gave a recital from the works of Guilmant, Wely, Handel, Batiste, &c. A public luncheon was held at Bellevue after the morning service, when the churchwarden (G. Neame, Esq.) complimented Mr. Haywood on the highly satisfactory manner in which the work had been carried out. The organ contains 3 manuals, 34 stops; with the exception of the old pipes, very little of the original instrument remains.

Liverpool.—On Thursday, September 30th, the private choir of Mr. James J. Monk, organist of St. Saviour's Church, gave a performance in the school-room, Falkner-square, Canning-street, to a large audience. The programme comprised Schubert's Mass in G, Henry Hiles's Cantata, The Crusaders, Mendelssohn's Loreley and Arthur Sullivan's dramatic Cantata, Trial by Jury. The rendering of the concerted music, under the bâton of Mr. Monk, showed careful training. Mrs. Connell presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. D. Roberts at the organ.

MAIDENHEAD.—A very successful evening concert was given in the Town Hall on Tuesday, the 12th ult., by Mr. John Roberts, pupil of Signor Fiori. The room was well filled by a fashionable audience. The programme was an admirable one, and was rendered in a most efficient manner. The instrumental performers were—Mr. W. S. Bambridge, Mus. Bac. (pianoforte), Mr. Walter Pettit (violoncello), and Mr. J. S. Liddell (violin). Bennett's Chamber Trio, and Beethoven's C minor Trio were much applauded; each of the above gentlemen also played solos, Mr. Bambridge gaining a rapturous encore for his Norwegian melodies. The vocal parts were well sustained by Miss Julia Roberts, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. John Roberts. Mr. Phillips, R.A.M., was a most efficient accompanist.

NORWICH.—At the quarterly meeting of the Teachers of Norwich and the County, held at the Girls' Model School on the 25th September, Mr. W. W. Pearson read a paper explanatory of his "National Method of teaching Music," which was listened to with much interest. Several speakers expressed themselves thoroughly satisfied with Mr. Pearson's attempt to simplify the plan of class-teaching, and the evening terminated with a selection of vocal music, well rendered by members of the Association.

OXFORD.—A Concert was held at Culham College, on the 2nd ult., when a number of the chef-d'œuvres of Mozart, Haydn, Weber, and Auber were performed by the College band with great success; Mozart's Overture to Figaro, and Haydn's Trio "No. 6," were greatly appreciated by the audience. Among the vocal contributions may be mentioned the excellent singing of Messrs. Croome, Colegate, and Smith, all of whom were encored. Several part-songs by Benedict, Bishop, and Mendelssohn were well received, and De Call's "How exquisite the feeling," created a marked impression on the audience. Mr. Bird accompanied in an able manner; and the concert was conducted by Mr. Desborough.

PLYMOUTH.—The Vocal Association opened the season with a performance of Solomon, on the 29th September. The soloists were Miss Enequist, Miss Scott, Miss Julia Elton, and Mr. Henry Guy; Mr. Löhr, as usual, conducting with his accustomed spirit and skill. The band, led by Mr. Pardew, rendered the overture and symphony very smoothly, and the accompaniments generally were all that could be desired. The fine harmonium was gratuitously lent by Mr. Sawday. The choruses, "Your harps," "With pious hearts," "May no rash intruder," and "From the censer," were exceedingly well rendered; but the great achievement of the choir was in the glorious choruses in the third part. Miss Elton gave the accompanying recitatives excellently, and Miss Enequist was highly effective in "Can I see my infant gored." Miss Scott is a lighter soprano than Miss Enequist; her voice is fresh, and her singing so good, that her first solo, "Thy sentence, great king," was re-demanded. Mr. Henry Guy has a capital tenor voice, and in the difficult airs, "Sacred raptures" and "Golden columns" was most successful.

PORTSMOUTH.—On Tuesday, the 5th ult., an excellent rendering of Judas Maccabæus was given by the Borough Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. Godwin Fowles, F.C.O., the band and chorus numbering one hundred. The solos were admirably given by Miss Jessie Royd, Mdme. A. Barnett, Mr. A. Kenningham, and Mr. Horscroft. The choruses were well sung, showing careful training on the part of Mr. Fowles, who is the founder of the Society.

SCARBOROUGH.—A concert was given at the Spa, on the 1st ult., in aid of the organ fund of All Saints Church. The programme included march and chorus from Tannhäuser, Trio in C minor (Mendelssohn) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Handel's Sonata in A, and compositions by Chopin, Bennett, &c., performed by Dr. Naylor, Herr Lutz, Mr. E. H. Thorne, Mr. G. B. Thackwray, the Rev. F. Hudson, Rev. T. Percy Hudson, and Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick. Madame Campobello-Sinico, Madame Armstrong, Mr. Sanderson, and the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick were the vocalists, their efforts being highly appreciated by a numerous audience.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 11th ult. Mr. John Peck, the well-known violinist of Sheffield, gave two musical entertainments in the Music Hall, Surrey-street, assisted by the juvenile pianists the Misses Agnes and Violet Molyneux. Their performances were highly satisfactory. Mrs. Holt was the vocalist, and sang with good taste. Mr. Peck played with his usual ability, and Mr. Wainwright on the English concertina was much applauded. Mr. Wm. Moxey accompanied the songs, and also took part in a trio from Il Trovatore, which gave great satisfaction.—On the 18th ult. a miscellaneous concert was given in the School-room of the Cherrytree-hill Methodist Free Church, in which the Orpheus Quartett and Miss Warrener, with Mr. William Moxey as solo pianist and accompanist, were the executants. The first part, which was sacred, opened with the Anthem, "Behold! how good and joyful," followed by Gounod's Nazareth by Mr. Makin. "O rest in the Lord" was ably rendered by Mrs. House, and Mr. Berrisford gave "In native worth" in good style. Sterndale Bennett's "God is a Spirit," sung by the Orpheus Quartett, was undoubtedly the gem of the evening, and called forth long and continuous applause. The second part consisted of glees, songs, and duets. Miss Widdowson accompanied on the harmonium, and Mr. Moxey played several solos. There was a numerous attendance.

SHERBORNE.—The prospectus of the Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. Louis N. Parker, announces two performances before Easter, and at Christmas a concert is to be given, the first part of the programme to consist of Mendelssohn's music to Athalie and the second to include an original choral work by the director. The Society appears excellently conducted, and we trust will meet with the patronage it deserves.

STALYBRIDGE.—The Sixty-first Annual Concert, under the auspices of the Stalybridge Old Band, was given on Thursday evening, the 30th September, in the Mechanics' Institution. The artists were Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. Nelson Varley; Madame Varley-Liebe, solo violin; and Mr. John Gladney, solo clarionet. Mr. Enos Andrew officiated as accompanist with his accustomed ability. The programme opened with a selection by the band from Balfe's Il Talismano, which was received with marked approbation. Madame Varley-Liebe made a very favourable impression in a violin solo; and Miss Cole's interpretation of "It was a dream," well merited the warm applause with which it was greeted. A clarionet solo by Mr. Gladney was a very effective performance. A selection from Tannhäuser was vociferously applauded. The National Anthem, by the band, closed the programme.

STOKE-ON-TRENT.—A concert was given by Mr. J. H. L. Glover, organist and choirmaster of St. Mark's, Shelton, on Thursday evening, the 14th ult. The programme included Sir W. S. Bennett's vocal trio "To a nightingale;" very well sung by Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Lowder, and Miss Thorley. Mendelssohn's two vocal duets, "I would that my love," and "The happy hunters," and vocal solos by Mr. Lovatt and Mr. Dumville. Liszt's grand concert fantasia on Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" (enthusiastically encored), a selection from his own compositions, and Chopin's Grand Valse in A flat, were most artistically played by Mr. Horton C. Allison. The honour of a recall was accorded to Miss Thorley, for her tasteful singing of Randegger's "Peacefully slumber," and much applause was bestowed on Mr. J. H. L. Glover's vocal quartett, "Bonny May."

TAUNTON.—The Taunton Philharmonic Association gave a Concert on Thursday, 30th September, in memory of the late Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, consisting of his Cantata, The May Queen, and selections from his other compositions. Miss Florence Rowe was the May Queen; Miss Marie Hayward, the Queen. Mr. George Cox, of Exeter Cathedral, took the part of the lover, and Mr. Loveday, Robin Hood. The Cantata was well performed throughout. Among the pieces in the miscellaneous part particular mention must be made of the contralto air, "O Lord Thou hast searched me out," from The Woman of Samaria, very well sung by Miss Marie Hayward; "Forget me not," by Mr. W. J. Trenchard (a pupil of Mr. Frederick Kingsbury); and the quartett, "God is a Spirit," which was re-demanded. This is the first concert given by the Association, which has but recently been started for the cultivation of classical music, chiefly by British composers. The performance was under the direction of Mr. John Comer.

WALTHAMSTOW.—Mr. Henry R. Bird's annual benefit concert for his father, Mr. G. Bird (organist of St. Mary's), was given at the Public Hall, on the 19th ult., assisted by some clever amateur stringed instrument performers (who were highly successful in selections from Rheinberger's Quartett in E flat (Op. 38) and Weber's Quartett in B flat (Op. 5). The vocalists were Miss Mary Davies, R.A.M., and Mr. Stedman, both of whom were warmly applauded; Mr. Stedman being recalled for his excellent rendering of Braham's song, "The anchor's weighed." Mr. Bird received well-merited applause for his pianoforte performances, which included Mendelssohn's Fantasia in F sharp minor, a Rondo by Chopin, and some minor pieces. The room was well filled.

WANDSWORTH.—On Thursday, the 14th ult., the Harvest Thanksgiving Service took place at the Parish Church of S. Anne, the spacious edifice being well filled. The choir was ably assisted by several amateurs, and also by members of the choirs of Holy Trinity and Upper Tooting. There was full choral evensong, commencing with the processional hymn, "Come, ye thankful people, come" (S. George); Psalter and Canticles (Helmore); Responses (Tallis); Special Psalms 65 (7th Tone, 4th ending), 104 (3rd Tone, 1st ending, A), and 150 (8th Tone, 2nd ending); Magnificat (5th Tone, 1st ending), Nunc dimittis (3rd Tone, 2nd ending); Anthem after third collect, "O give thanks" (B. Farebrother); Anthem before sermon, "O Lord, how manifold" (J. Barnby); Hymn after sermon, 224 (Monkland); Te Deum (2nd Tone); Recessional hymn, 360 (Wir pflugen). The service was intoned by the Rev. E. W. T. Chave, D.D., vicar, and the Rev. H. de C. Collyer, B.A. The lessons were read by the Rev. J. Conder, M.A., and the sermon preached by the Rev. Evan Daniel, M.A., Principal of the Training College, Battersea. Mr. C. W. Hanson, organist and director of the choir, played, as concluding voluntary, Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—Mr. George Wheeldon's concert (under the patronage of The Right Hon. the Earl of Dartmouth), which took place on the 11th ult., at the Exchange, was in every respect a decided success. Mr. Wheeldon's pianoforte performances were, as might be expected, an important feature in the programme, and elicited the warmest applause. In Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 30, No. 3), for pianoforte and violin (in which he was worthily associated with M. Sainton), his classical style was effectively displayed, and in a Novelette by Schumann, Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," and Pauer's "La Cascade," he gave ample proof of the versatility of his powers. M. Sainton's Fantasia on Scotch airs was also highly successful. Madame Patey created a genuine effect in W. H. Cummings's ballad, "Yellow lie the corn-rigs," which was encored with enthusiasm, and she received a similar compliment for her singing of Barnby's song, "Thou whom my heart adoreth." Vocal solos were also contributed by Miss Edith Wynne (who gave Roëckel's "Once upon a time" so well as to cause a demand for its repetition), Mr. Cummings and Mr. Patey. The pianoforte upon which Mr. Wheeldon played was a splendid iron concert-grand, sent down for the occasion by Messrs. Collard and Collard. The room was very full, and the orchestra, decorated with choice exotics, ferns and grasses, presented a very pleasing appearance.

WORTHING.—The annual meeting of the Sacred Harmonic Society was held at the Davison Schools, on the 20th ult. A report and balance-sheet were read by the Hon. Secretary, showing a small balance in favour of the Society as against a deficit last year. The reappointment of the Committee of last season was unanimously agreed to, and Rev. J. G. Gresson, Mr. A. H. Collet, and Mr. L. S. Palmer were re-elected respectively as President, Hon. Sec., and Conductor; Mr. F. D. Carnell, organist at the Parish Church, being appointed Organist. The oratorio chosen for the ensuing year was Samson. This Society was established in 1872, since which The Messiah, The Creation, Judas Maccabæus, The Lobgesang, and a selection from the works of the great masters have been performed.

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

4, Rose Cottages, South Norwood Hill,
London, May 24, 1875.

Sir,—I enclose a P.O. Order for the Pedals and Action, and am exceedingly pleased with the easy and ingenious manner of attaching the Pedals to the Pianoforte Keys. It all works well.

Yours truly,
JESSE MINNS, F.C.O.,
Member of the Council of the College of Organists.

To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol.

Pianoforte Warehouse, Northumberland-street,
Newcastle-on-Tyne, Oct. 16th, 1875.

Sir,—I am very much pleased with the Pedals and Action; it is easily attached to a pianoforte, is noiseless, and in every way a great improvement on the roller-board system.

Yours truly,
C. H. SHEPHERD, A.R.A.

To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol.

These letters are similar to a great many others which have been received.

ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. HATTERSLEY & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

Price from 7 Guineas.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is called to their Celebrated 17-Guinea

GOVERNMENT SINGING.

By J. Powell Metcalfe.
Sec. for Music to the York Diocesan Choral Association.

Who will deny that one of the foremost questions of this our day of increasing wages and shortening hours of work is the employment of the spare time of our workers?

What is there, then, for their rational amusement when the day's toil is over, agreeing with the national taste, truly recreative, and yet to be enjoyed with that which of itself is refreshment, namely, society? The reading-room, with its papers and books and chess-board? A weary body makes a weary mind, a general recreation must make no further demands that day on either mental or bodily energy. Music is the one word that alone suggests the fulfilment of all the required conditions: music, that above all—let those deny it who can—falls in with the Englishman's feeling—music, that most potent of stimulants of the fagged mind—music, that cannot exist without interchange of pleasure given and pleasure received. No one who believes that the State may well and wisely give thought to the way in which the workers' hours of relaxation are spent will doubt for a moment the wisdom of the policy that formally acknowledges that the cultivation of music is a national benefit, to be sought by State provision. It is the purpose of this paper to draw attention to the results at present accruing over the land from the steps taken in accordance with this acknowledgment, in itself so wise and far-seeing.

There was a flickering of hope aroused in the breasts of those who have given attention to this matter, by the first draught of this year's Code, wherein the all-important words that signify the State's patronage of music stand thus under the head of "Grants to day-schools," "One shilling (per scholar), if singing is satisfactorily taught." Had these words been allowed to remain, and due provision made for their being carried out to the letter, little more could have been desired. To be sure, there would have remained the temptation, from that absurd shilling-a-head system, to ruin all by trying to teach an unteachably large proportion of children; but that word "satisfactorily"—which, of course, implies due and capable inspection—would soon have corrected this, and the teacher would not have been long in learning the unwisdom of risking all for the extra shilling or two, by the disastrous misleading of the one or two incorrigible ears. But this most common-sense sentence—in which, by-the-by, one seems to see the struggle of that most true but over-weighted man, Inspector Professor Hullah, for something real—this most common-sense sentence (for why on earth should public money be paid—worse than merely wasted—if singing be not satisfactorily taught?) is tossed aside, and in its place reappears in the new Code that disastrous sentence from the old one: "One shilling, if singing forms part of the ordinary course of instruction." So we still go on with the old systematic destruction of ear, uprooting of musical feeling, and implanting disgust for music and all belonging to it, by that portentous system of setting every schoolmaster, with ear or without ear, to teach singing to every child, with ear or without ear, with results to be adjudicated on by every Inspector, with ear or without ear. Now I ask any musician who may read these lines, if he were set to pick out of an ordinary school-room full of children as many as he thought would pay for teaching singing to, about what proportion he would expect to get? Would it be more than one-fifth? Those who have to do with choirs know well enough that, as a rule, it will take a school of sixty children, at the very least, to supply a dozen capable of being taught efficiently to take part in the singing. What would any ordinary choirmaster say to mixing up with his selected, the balance of the "two-thirds," required to be presented to the Inspector as singers, as condition of any grant whatsoever being made for singing. Plainly, would any man who knows what singing is undertake to keep two-thirds of any ordinary school in tune? if he had to teach day by day?

Ay, this is just the point of the matter. It is not recognised in the Government system of teaching singing that the keeping in tune is just the all-in-all of singing; that unless the intervals be true, there can be no music; that to call an interval a third that lacks two or three commas, is as false teaching as to teach that three times three are eight. We hear much about singing by note in schools. It would sorely puzzle the learned Inspector of Music himself accurately to write down in notes an ordinary piece of Government shilling-a-head singing; he would find it a very movable Do, indeed, that he had to deal with. No, we declare advisedly and positively that it is not singing at all that, as a rule, is taught in our schools, and for which national money is spent. But this is not the worst of it: the national money is not merely wasted, as though it were simply tossed into the sea. It is spent, in truth, for producing exactly the opposite of what it pretends to be spent for. If one schoolmaster taught that three times three were eight, another might soon set the child right by judicious reference to its fingers; but if the ear be allowed to pass as a third an interval that lacks a quarter of a note of it, that ear is gradually being debased and robbed of that power of discrimination in which consists musical feeling and musical pleasure, and that, too, past all recovery. Such teaching may prove good lung-opening to the non-musical; to the musical it produces first pain, then disgust, then utter indifference. Such teaching is systematically and persistently crushing out that God-given, natural and national taste that alone can be cultivated into the worker's true and fitting recreation; nay, I will say it—this paper is for musicians' eyes—our one hope of supplying to coming generations an efficient counter-attraction to the haunts of drunkenness and vice.

Doubtless, if only our schoolmasters were set free to teach as many or as few children as they thought fit—or, what would be far better still, if the "not less than two thirds" were changed into "not more than one fifth," with five shillings a head, so making the grant the same—one step would be taken to stay the lamentable mischief at present at work. Now they are strictly tied down. They know well enough they may safely count on the Inspector not knowing A from B at sight, or A from A sharp by ear; they know they have but to keep the noise going without intermission or relaxation, and their shillings are sure. But what must be the effect of all this upon the schoolmasters themselves? What ear, however good to begin with, could possibly bear up against the daily repeated "Government singing" of a whole school? The effort to stem the tide of discord must soon destroy any voice, and take from it all point and attack; and unconsciously the ear will assuredly accustom itself to fatal compromises with false notes, compromises, alas! that will be made more and more readily as time goes on. In fact, not only are we destroying our children's ears—paying for the operation one shilling a head—but by the same system we are systematically debasing the ears of our schoolmasters, the only teachers of singing Government will acknowledge. Well, and what can we do in this emergency? Little, very little, it is to be feared, at present; the tide of mischief flows too fast now to be stayed, much less thrown back to flow the other way, all at once. It is a matter for the pressure of public musical opinion, and this we each in his own sphere must strive to arouse. We have one good and true man, Professor Hullah, to look to; we must back him up till, at last, he shall be able to cast a ray of light upon the gross musical darkness of "My Lords" of the Education Department. We must not be led astray by any false issues of the day; the fixed and the movable Do, "shall we teach by ear or by note"? Of course, there is a time for all this. He is no musician surely who cannot read notes, any more than he is a scholar in the meanest sense who cannot read words. Granted this, but do we begin by teaching children to read words? We teach them to speak, surely, first of all—that is, we teach them to discriminate sounds spoken and to imitate those sounds by articulation. So with singing, must we first of all teach the discrimination of true notes and true intervals, and their correct imitation in clear attack and properly formed notes. True tune, true tone, these we must uphold as the two essentials of song: all sounds without these are only noise, though Government itself calls them singing. And there is another matter we must try to get a united voice upon, loud enough to reach "My Lords'" tuneless ears. "May I ask you whether you sing?" said the writer of these lines to the Inspector, as he proposed to inspect the singing children of his school. "No, but my wife plays," was the answer. We must try to get public musical opinion to assert that "My wife playing" is not musical qualification enough to fit a man to judge of the singing of a school, with a view to the awarding of public money. In short, what we have to do is, as taxpayers, to protest against money being spent, in the promotion of discord, that is granted for the teaching of singing; and as musicians, to insist that a knowledge of music is required to form just judgment in matters musical.

TEMPERANCE MUSIC.

By Henry C. Lunn.

If any proof were wanting that a great portion of the pleasures of our forefathers consisted in drinking and making merry, it might be found in the fact of many of our most popular vocal pieces glorifying this method of passing time away; and indeed it has been said that so powerful is the effect of music that much of the intemperance of the olden time was mainly owing to the capital songs in its praise. However this may be, there can be no question that music of this kind was constantly sung even in drawing-rooms; and that verses boldly asserting that wine was the joy of our lives were listened to and applauded in localities where such sentiments would now be scarcely tolerated. In the novel of "Tom Jones" we read—"It was Mr. Western's custom every afternoon, as soon as he was drunk, to hear his daughter play on the harpsichord; for he was a great lover of music;" we are also told that "he never relished any music but what was light and airy, and, indeed, his most favourite tunes were 'Old Sir Simon the King,' 'St. George, he was for England,' 'Bobbing Joan,' and some others." Many persons now may scarcely perhaps know these songs, but they were evidently popular when music was administered as a mild sedative in the evening to those listeners who had sense enough left to benefit by its influence. On the Squire himself there can be no doubt of its effect, for on one occasion he swore to his daughter that he would instantly grant the favour she begged, "if she would give him t'other bout of old Sir Simon." In an atmosphere like this there can be little wonder that what may be called "Intemperance Songs" found a ready acceptance; but it was not only in the houses of country gentlemen, but of town gentlemen, that compositions of this character were often heard, in confirmation of which it may be mentioned that a favourite vocal piece of the time derived much of its attraction from the reiteration of the elegant line, "You were drunk when you died." Of course, when it was considered a merit in a man to be a hard drinker, it was natural that compositions should become favourites which sang the praises of wine; and although it was undoubtedly true that several of these effusions were kept for after-dinner songs, the period termed "after-dinner" continued for so large a portion of the night that there was in reality no time for any other kind of music. In these times, too, even when any of the guests made their appearance in the drawing-room, it was a very common thing for some young gentleman to be called upon for a "good song;" and we have often heard a mild youth, who in the present day would have ventured upon a sentimental ballad, calling for a "bumper of burgundy" to drink to the "health of the King, God bless him," with an evident consciousness that he was consulting the taste of his audience.

The reaction which has lately set in against music of this class is by no means an unmixed benefit. Everybody will be glad to find bad compositions replaced by good; but we have no sympathy with those who would wish to retain the tunes of old songs and substitute for the original words some maudlin verses adapted for family use. When Tom Moore tells you to "drink of this cup," he does so with the glowing lines of a genial poet; here is the opening verse:—

"Drink of this cup—you'll find there's a spell in Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality;
Talk of the cordial that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.
Would you forget the dark world we are in,
Only taste of the bubble that gleams on the top of it;
But would you rise above earth, till akin
To immortals themselves, you must drain every drop of it."

Let vocalists do as they please about singing this, but if they do sing it, let them understand that words and music are inseparable. We have lately seen a highly respectable modern version of "Mynheer Vandunck," where the word to which the name so aptly rhymes is altered, and all the allusions to that horrible "brandy and water" boldly cut out. An advertisement has also occasionally attracted our attention informing us that a "Temperance Dibdin" is now published, so that admirers of this writer can have his verses properly diluted with water and arranged to the original music. Let us also mention, in proof of the progress of this movement, that tickets have been recently forwarded to us for a concert given by a gentleman who calls himself a "Temperance Tenor." Whether he thus styles himself because he has taken the pledge, or is merely a missionary in the cause by singing songs advocating teetotalism, we cannot say; but, certainly, in the programme of his performance we do not see one composition which has even the faintest allusion to this subject. Our readers may, perhaps, recollect that some years ago we received for review a batch of "Gingeret music," and that we gave some of the verses as specimens of the style. Of course there can be no possible reason why lines should not be written in honour of "Gingeret," or any other non-alcoholic beverage, but as many of these were adapted to the music of some of Mozart's most beautiful operatic airs, we felt bound to protest against such a desecration.

If temperance songs make any progress in public favour, it certainly will not be by writing new verses to old music. We freely grant that many of the compositions of this kind once held in high esteem are utterly worthless; but, on the other hand, those which have an amount of musical merit sufficient to make us wish to preserve them should not be suffered to fall into oblivion because the fashion which suggested the original words has passed away. There is so much meddling with works in these times, that were it possible for some deceased authors we could mention to revisit the earth, they would be puzzled to know their own productions. If we are growing too virtuous to be satisfied with the songs which pleased our grandfathers, let us get new ones; but we have no right to pat about those which exist until we have made them to our liking. There may have been, perhaps, a little too much conviviality in the past age, but there may be, perhaps, a little too much cant in the present; and, from a purely musical view, we doubt whether we shall ever have as good songs in praise of water as we have had in praise of wine.

When a man buys property on a lease of 999 years, he has a legal right to believe that, however costly his bargain may be, he will be put to no more expense after he has paid the purchase-money. The amateurs who have "managed" the Royal Albert Hall until they have plunged it into hopeless ruin, are no doubt perfectly aware of the right we have mentioned; but finding the law inconvenient, have resolved to apply to Parliament for permission to compel the seat-holders to pay an annual rent to cover the present losses and establish a permanent fund to enable them to carry on their costly amusement in the future. We have more faith in the justice of our parliamentary legislators than to believe it possible that such an Act can ever pass; but meantime it is the duty of all lovers of justice boldly to protest against a proceeding which places the purses of a trusting few at the mercy of a self-elected corporation.

The two events of the greatest interest to the musical world during Carl Rosa's short season of English Opera at the Princess's Theatre have unquestionably been the presentation of "Le Nozze di Figaro" as Mozart wrote it, and the production of Cherubini's opera, "Les Deux Journées," under the title of "The Water Carrier." Why this last-named work was deferred until the final week, so that it could only be performed twice, we are unable to say; but if any doubts existed as to its success, we are glad to believe that they must have been dispelled, for the second time it was acted there was not a seat to be had in any part of the house. Mr. Santley's singing and acting showed how thoroughly his heart was in his work; and we should have imagined that the same might have been said of Miss Rose Hersee and Miss Julia Gaylord, had we not seen the line in the bills that they had "kindly undertaken the parts to strengthen the cast." Madlle. Torriani and Mr. Lyall were also excellent; and the reception of the music throughout the opera proved how heartily it was appreciated, and how firm a reliance may now be placed upon the verdict of a popular audience even when a work has been unfavourably pronounced upon by a Court of Fashion. We trust that the spirited lessee will profit by his experience in the next campaign, and waste no more time over such colourless operas as "The Porter of Havre" and some others we could name, which have only been endured on account of their English origin.

We have frequently wondered by whom certain semi-comic songs we occasionally see are sung. We know that those embellished with the portraits of male vocalists, in idiotic costume, are intended for the Music-Halls; and we are also aware that the silly, pert little effusions for young ladies who affect "arch singing," often find their way into drawing-rooms; but we especially allude to those the words of which are not comic enough for the former, and too coarse and ungrammatical for the latter. Should our readers desire a specimen of the class of composition which thus puzzles us, we refer them to the following, which we copy from the title-page of one which constantly arrests our attention in a leading thoroughfare at the West-end:

> "Then it's Croquet, Croquet, a jolly game to play;
> At Croquet, Croquet, we pass time away.
> In garden or in green there never yet has been > Such an awful jolly game as Croquet."

As our knowledge of this song is exclusively limited to as much as can be seen in a shop-window, we cannot pronounce upon the merit of the music, but have no doubt that it is fully equal to that of the poetry.

Our remarks in the last number of the Musical Times upon an advertisement from a singing-master, announcing that his method requires "no private study" from the pupil, has called forth a letter from the Professor himself, which we should be happy to insert had he not thought proper to fill three sides and a-half of closely written paper. We have not yet given the name of the advertiser; and as we cannot, from the reason named, print his letter, we shall still withhold any allusion to his personality. Meantime, however, it is but fair to say that he encloses copies of laudatory communications upon his teaching, tells us that he was a member of the Conservatoire in Paris, and enters into a long explanation in justification of the line in his advertisement upon which we commented. As the testimonials he sends are from "Mrs. H—— to Doctor R——," Mr. J—— to Mr. F——," &c., we seem right in assuming that no vocalist of eminence has been trained on this system; and if by the sentence, "No private study is required of the pupil," he means that it is better for the master always to superintend the practice, we quite agree with him; and where monetary considerations are no object, we might say, with equal truth, that it is better for a patient, who often requires medical aid, to engage his doctor to live with him.

For a critic to read a paper on criticism before critics is a somewhat novel proceeding; but this was actually done by Mr. Charles Salaman at the first meeting of the "Musical Association" for the present season. That this delicate subject was delicately handled reflected much credit upon the author of the paper; and we therefore hold him blameless for what occurred during the discussion which followed. Our contemporaries have had much to say upon the matter; and by this time we should imagine that musical readers have had enough of Flibbertigibbet, The Dancing Barber, and the Hog in Armour. We merely, therefore, record that by these terms certain critics and journals were pointed out by Dr. Stone in his speech. The subject is highly interesting; and for ourselves, we shall be glad if good eventually arise from its ventilation. But, meantime, we may say that if at the meetings of the Musical Association personalities such as Dr. Stone indulged in (covered even as they were by what may be termed "parliamentary language") are permitted by the Chairman, the Society will undoubtedly crumble away, and nobody will regret its downfall.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The principal event of interest at these concerts has been the production of Joachim Raff's Symphony in G minor, a work of such pretension as to preclude the possibility of gauging its merits on a single hearing. We may say, however, that although the compositions of this writer already known in England—more especially his "Lenore" Symphony—have raised public expectation regarding future works from the same pen, there can be little doubt that his reputation will be even enhanced by the Symphony introduced by Herr Manns at the sixth concert. The instrumentation is masterly in the extreme, and the themes throughout are tuneful, the Scherzo particularly, although somewhat Mendelssohnish, being extremely fascinating. Amongst the instrumental works given during the past month we must also mention Mr. C. E. Stephens's clever and characteristic Overture, "A Dream of Happiness" which received, as it deserved, the warmest applause. Brahms's "Song of Destiny" has again produced a marked effect upon the audience, and there can be little doubt that this fine composition has now firmly established itself in public favour. Madame Norman-Neruda and Madame Essipoff have been cordially welcomed, and their performances greeted with enthusiastic plaudits by crowded audiences. Madame Osgood, an American singer, was most favourably received in an "Ave Maria" by Mr. Dudley Buck, a composer well known in the United States, and the vocal music has been on the whole rather above the average.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

The Saturday musical performances at this establishment have already fully compensated for any shortcomings upon which we have from time to time commented, and which were no doubt inseparable from the attempt to organise a definite system of management in this department which should gain the confidence of the public. Indeed had nothing been done save to revive Handel's Oratorio, "Esther," the directors would be entitled to the highest amount of praise. This fine work, which was given on the 6th ult., for the first time in its entirety since 1757, was received with an amount of favour which should inspire all whose love of art would incite them to resuscitate Handel's lesser-known compositions with the utmost confidence. Written, when the composer was resident at Cannons, especially for his patron the Duke of Chandos, "Esther" had but small opportunity of growing in public estimation; for although selections from it have often been given at Festivals, and at the old (so-called) "Oratorio Concerts," no performance of the complete composition has been heard since the date already mentioned. Students have made themselves well acquainted with the many beauties contained in the vocal portions of this work; but the overture, although cut to the conventional pattern prevailing in Handel's time, until lately was a great favourite with amateur pianists. The solos are, as a rule, extremely sympathetic with the words, and many—"Dread not, righteous Queen," and "O Jordan, sacred tide," for example—are models of pure vocal writing. Amongst the choruses may be especially mentioned the lament of the Israelites, "Ye sons of Israel, mourn," "He comes to end our woes" (both of which were encored), "Virtue, Truth and Innocence," and the final chorus, "The Lord our enemy hath slain," which in breadth and grandeur of treatment is almost equal to any of this great master's choruses in his later works. The execution of the Oratorio reflected the utmost credit on all concerned. With few exceptions, the choruses were given with an accuracy and careful observance of the gradations of tone in the highest degree commendable, and Mr. H. Weist Hill, who conducted the whole of the performance, may be fairly congratulated upon the result of his labours in the preparation of so difficult a work. The solos were entrusted to Madme. Nouver (soprano), Miss Enriquez (contralto), Messrs. Vernon Rigby and Howells (tenors), and Mr. Wadmore (bass), all of whom acquitted themselves with excellent effect, Madame Nouver displaying an extremely sympathetic voice, and receiving much applause in her principal airs. The additions to Handel's score, written for the occasion by Mr. Halberstadt, materially enhanced the effect, and throughout the Oratorio the band was everything that could be desired. Mr. F. Archer made a judicious use of the organ, both in the choral movements and in the recitatives.

FESTIVAL OF THE COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

The enormous congregation assembled in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 22nd ult. (St. Cecilia's Day), at the Annual Festival of the College of Organists, must afford sufficient evidence that the love of sacred music has now so firmly taken root with the general public that a revival of the grand old works which our English composers have dedicated to the service of the Church may be confidently looked for. That Purcell's "Te Deum" in D, the principal composition selected for this Festival, should not have been heard in London since 1829, certainly does not redound much to the credit of those who organise choral services, especially as the composer wrote it for the celebration of St. Cecilia's Day, in 1692; and it was indeed a worthy act of homage to the memory of our gifted countryman on the part of the College of Organists to reproduce this work on so appropriate an occasion and under the same roof where it was first heard.

If the assembling of between four and five hundred choristers and engaging a full orchestra were sufficient preparation for the due rendering of such difficult music as was attempted at this Festival, there could be but little doubt of a successful result; but, spite of the grandeur of effect always produced by the union of so many voices, those with sensitive ears could not but be conscious of the want of unanimity, not only in time, but in tune. Choir, orchestra, and organ were at variance in the pitch throughout the service; and, notwithstanding the praiseworthy exertions of Mr. E. H. Turpin, who conducted, almost every point was marred by the want of certainty in the attack, caused by the impossibility of gaining perfect control over so vast a number of singers, with the organist so far removed from them. The "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" from Dr. Stainer's Service in A, brought out all the defects we have mentioned most painfully; but as the vocalists became accustomed to the difficulties they had to surmount, the improvement was manifest. Croft's fine Anthem, "God is gone up," went fairly well, the responsive phrases being given with as much decision as, under the circumstances, was practicable. The chanting of the Psalms, and the singing of the Hymns, both before and after the sermon, left little to be desired. The sermon, eloquently advocating the use of music as an aid to worship, was preached by Dr. Barry; and in order, we presume, to gain time for the collection, Handel's "Occasional Overture" was played by the band, the organ, however, so powerfully domineering over the orchestra, and at times being so completely independent of it, as to cause an unpleasant sensation amongst the lovers of this fine composition. Despite the drawbacks we have alluded to, the sublimity of Purcell's "Te Deum" came out with grand effect; indeed, the whole of the executants appeared to have reserved their powers to prove to the thousands assembled how noble a composition has been allowed to slumber for years in the country to which it was bequeathed. Even those whose ears are tuned to modern services detected nothing antiquated in Purcell's harmonies, nothing, indeed, but profound thought, depth of expression, and a religious fervour which is as forcible in 1875 as it was when heard on St. Cecilia's Day, 1692. We were glad to hear Dr. Stainer once more at the organ, although we believe that he only played a voluntary, the rest of the duty being undertaken by Mr. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. J. H. Coward, and the Rev. Canon Gregory read the lessons. We sincerely hope that the sum collected during the evening for the funds of the College of Organists was an ample reward for the exertions which must have been bestowed upon a Festival of so important a character.

WE are glad to announce that the Dean and Chapter of Hereford have granted the use of the Cathedral for the Musical Festival of 1876, so that, in spite of a very decided organised opposition, the performances will take place as in former years. At the approaching Birmingham Festival (which, we hear, is provisionally fixed for the end of August) we are promised a new sacred work by Professor G. A. Macfarren, and two secular Cantatas by Professor Niels W. Gade, of Copenhagen, and Mr. F. H. Cowen respectively.

THE St. George's Glee Union (Pimlico Rooms) Concert, on the 5th ult., was a miscellaneous one, and included the part-songs, "In this hour," "Fairy song," "Ye mariners" (Pierson), and an arrangement of "The Cruiskeen Lawn," by Sir R. P. Stewart, all of which were rendered with the precision and care for which the choir is distinguished. Miss Buley sang, "He roamed in the forest" (A. O'Leary); Miss Spear, "She wandered down the mountain side" (F. Clay); and Mr. Theo. Distin, "To Anthea" (Hatton), in each case with great success. Miss White gave a pleasing rendering of "Sleep, my love" (Sullivan), and pianoforte solos by Miss Heath and Mrs. Richardson were well received. Mr. Fry will recite the lyrics to Mendelssohn's "Athalie" at the December Concert.

WE have much pleasure in calling attention to the excellent series of subscription concerts given by the South London Choral Association, the first of which took place during the past month. Handel's "Messiah," G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," Meyerbeer's "Ninety-first Psalm," Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," Mozart's "Ne Pulvis," and "Ave Verum," Schubert's "Serenade," Randegger's "Joyous Life," and other important works will be given during the season. The performances take place on Monday evenings, at the Lecture-hall, Carter-street.

A CHORAL FESTIVAL is to be held in Westminster Abbey on Wednesday afternoon, the 8th inst., in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund. The Service will be Attwood in D, and in the anthems the old masters will be represented by Purcell's "O sing unto the Lord," Orlando Gibbons's "Hosanna" (unaccompanied), and Croft's "Cry aloud and shout," the selections from modern church composers being Dr. Wesley's "Wilderness," Sir John Goss's "Lift up thine eyes," and Dr. Bridge's "It is a good thing to give thanks." Dr. Bridge, the new organist of the Abbey, will preside at the organ, and the sermon is to be preached by the Dean of Westminster. To those who are unacquainted with the objects of the Fund, it may be well to state briefly that it was established for the purpose of providing relief to the Widows and Orphans of the Organists and Lay Clerks of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches.

THE first soirée musicale of the second season of the Aldermanbury Musical Society took place on Monday evening the 15th ult., in the saloons of the Oriental-buildings, New Bridge-street, when nearly seven hundred members and friends were present. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental music. Mendelssohn's part-song, "Farewell to the forest," and Sullivan's "O hush thee, my babie," were well sung by the choir. Miss Easterbrook, Miss Helen Heath, Mr. Answorth, Mr. Salisbury, and Mr. Lionel Levey contributed several songs, and two quartets were well sung by Messrs. Yeo, Mellis, Salisbury and Markham, Mr. Fisher and Herr Lehmeyer accompanied, and Mr. Edward Craig conducted.

MR. JOHN SMYTH, on his retirement from the office of Organist of St. Philip's Church, Sydenham, has been presented with a very handsome inkstand by the chorister-boys, as a token of their affectionate regard and esteem.

ETON COLLEGE.—Bach's Cantata, "God's own time is ever best," will be given at the College Chapel, with a large chorus and full orchestra, on Saturdays, December 4th and 11th, in the ordinary afternoon service, commencing at four o'clock.

AMONGST the events of interest during the past month we may mention the marriage of Miss Edith Wynne to Mr. Aviet Agabeg, of the Inner Temple. The announcement of this favourite vocalist at a concert, under the name which she has made so famous, leads us to hope that she has no intention of retiring from the profession.

MR. WALTER BACHE, whose Recital was given at St. James's Hall on the 1st ult., selected a programme well calculated to display both his taste in the choice of compositions and his power of poetically rendering them. His performance of Chopin's Six Preludes, Bach's Fantasia in C minor, and two of Mendelssohn's Characteristic Pieces, we prefer to that of Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Op. 111, although in each piece he elicited an equal amount of the warmest applause. He was ably assisted by Mrs. Beesley in Raff's Chaconne for two pianofortes. Herr Wilhelmj delighted everybody by his exquisite violin performance, and Miss Anna Williams, in some vocal solos, was highly successful.

THE Annual Festival of the London Church Choir Association, which was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday, the 4th ult., attracted a very large congregation. Dr. Stainer's Processional Hymn showed how well an experienced hand can battle with lines ill adapted for musical treatment; and Mr. E. J. Hopkins, who supplied an anthem for the occasion, may be congratulated upon the able manner in which he has performed his task. It is a work which would reflect the highest credit upon any musician, the last of the three movements especially showing a power of choral writing which convinces us that its author might successfully attempt a work of even higher pretension. The harmonies to the Preces and Responses, taken from Mr. B. St. J. B. Joule's "Directorium Chori Anglicanum," were extremely effective, and Mr. John Blockley, jun.'s double chants, to which the Psalms were recited, despite the somewhat strange sequence of keys, fell agreeably upon the ear. The Canticles were given to Smart in F, and after the sermon the Hymn was sung to Mr. Charles E. Stephens's tune, a composition so pure and musicianlike that it will no doubt be often heard at future services. The Recessional Hymn was by that clever young composer, Mr. F. E. Gladstone. Throughout the service the music was excellently sung, and the organ accompaniments of Mr. W. S. Hoyte were the theme of general admiration.

WE are glad to call public attention once more to Mr. Charles Lunn's "Philosophy of Voice," which has now reached a third edition. The book, in substance, remains the same; but the new Appendix, headed "The Basis of Musical Expression," should be read by all who take a real interest in the subject.

A LECTURE on "Judas Maccabæus," illustrated by selections from Handel's Oratorio, was delivered on Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., at the Athenæum, Camden-road. The selection included "Pious orgies," well sung by Miss Ellen Horne; and the duets, "Hail, hail, Judea, happy land," and "O lovely peace," by the same lady and Mrs. Bradshawe-Mackay, the latter being unanimously encored. The manner in which the choral parts of the programme were rendered speaks well for the training of the members of the St. James's Institute Choral Class, under their able conductor, Mr. T. G. B. Halley. The accompaniments throughout were well played by Mrs. Halley.

Speaking of the coming Wrexham National Eisteddvod, the Wrexham Guardian says:—"Welsh musicians will be gratified to read the following letter, which has been received from Sir Julius Benedict:—

'To Mr. Robert Williams.

'Dear Sir,—I feel equally honoured and flattered by the request of the committee of the Wrexham National Eisteddvod to adjudicate upon the principal musical competitions at such an important and national meeting. In accepting this responsible office, I shall endeavour to justify by the strictest impartiality the high distinction conferred upon me by the committee.

'With best thanks for your kind letter, I remain, your most obedient servant, 'Julius Benedict.'
